For as long as you are prepared to illustrate so graphically
the difference between a CBer, an M3/CB Fools' Licensee, a CBer-Masquerading-As-A-Radio-Ham and a _REAL_ Radio Ham with his gentlemanly traditions, I am prepared to watch you bemusedly from the sidelines and to chastise
you for your ridiculous outbursts.

It is important that we as Radio Hams make a stand for civilised behaviour and decency against the vile CBer,
no matter how he might have slipped into our midst.

Don't you realise how silly and ridiculous you make yourself
look, by indulging in what are essentially very infantile abusive tirades in an international forum that is broadcast to the whole world?

However, if you wish to be perceived as a Childish Broadcaster (CBer)
then just carry on as you are with your Childish Broadcasting (CB).

You, coming as you do from a background as a ship's radio
"officer", really ought to know better. Shame on you.

Grow up, Mike Gathergood!

Stupid boy.

This is rich coming from the Dud who pretty much pioneered the concept of "insult their family" in rrap.

Examples:

"Speaking of surly lapdogs with poor gums, how IS Mrs Lennie ..."

"Dust them off occassionally with Mrs Putzman's correspondence courses, no doubt?"

"G'nite! Best to Mrs Lennie!"

"I can't imagine the slimey feeling Mrs. A must get having to be near
you. God I hope you never had the chance to procreate."

"Please re-direct your comments to someone who LIKES scumbags...Like Mrs Lennie, for example."

"The ones I feel sorry for are Mrs Lennie and thier cats."

"Does Mrs. Lennie know she's sleeping with a patholgical liar, Lennie?"

"And since Mrs Lennie the First has since passed away and you are now....."

"Mrs A is getting her neo-Nazi leatehrs out for you...."

"ressurected from wherever it is he and Mrs Lennie slither ..."

"I am sure Mrs. Brokeslob wonders what her little Hansie is up to."

"I reitierate my assumption that Mrs. Brokeslob has cut off the goodies again...."

"Mrs Brokeslob catch you eyeing the neighbor's kids again?"

"Your kids will read these some day and they'll see what an unethical toad you really are, Brain."

"I'm sure your children are proud of their daddy."

"What are you going to say to your kids when they confront you with this stuff one day?"

Google provides.

2569. The ten secrets of rec.radio.amateur.policy

Top Ten Hidden Secrets of r.r.a.p.:

10. KB9RQZ doesn't understand logic. Never has, never will.

9. Len wants a pony for Christmas but, due to a secret deal between Dave Sumner and Riley Hollingsworth, he'll never get it.

8. K2ASP is our resident legal advisor. Sgt Robeson is our traffic cop. Neither have jurisdiction outside their own imagination.

7. N9OGL provides millions of Americans with delightful entertainment just like so many of the shows on the QVC and K1MAN networks.

6. Mike Coslo lurks.

5. Ignore N0IMD. All of us do.

4. If you jiggle the handle on the r.r.a.p Executive Washroom you can get in there sometimes. Just be sure and do it after hours because if you get caught sneaking in you'll have to ride next to N2EY on the team bus on the trip to Dayton while he explains the advantages of CW.

3. We're actually all very nice here. We only flame the clueless and/or annoying.

2. OK, so we do flame some other people. But they had it coming.

1. RRAP Speed Limit: 5WPM (Farnsworth format 18/5).

Whatever ,considering his weekly outpours ,it seems that Gareth ,G4SDW is subject to some mental derailment. If we all just ignore him there might be a chance that he is starting to get the message that he is making a fool of himself..... so it is up to all of us on these NGs .

For as long as you are prepared to illustrate so graphically
the difference between a CBer, an M3/CB Fools' Licensee, a CBer-Masquerading-As-A-Radio-Ham and a _REAL_ Radio
Ham with his gentlemanly traditions, I am prepared to watch you bemusedly from the sidelines and to chastise
you for your ridiculous outbursts.

It is important that we as Radio Hams make a stand for civilised behaviour and decency against the vile CBer,
no matter how he might have slipped into our midst.

Don't you realise how silly and ridiculous you make yourself
look, by indulging in what are essentially very infantile
abusive tirades in an international forum that is broadcast to the whole world?

However, if you wish to be perceived as a Childish Broadcaster (CBer)
then just carry on as you are with your Childish Broadcasting (CB).

Grow up, Frank Dinger!

Stupid boy.

At one time, Wood & Douglas was a respectable supplier to the Ham Radio market, although it has long since devoted itself to commercial markets only.

However, the behaviour of its EXPORT SALES MANAGER, one Mike Gathergood, who has contributed a great number of grossly offensive and abusive publications to this NG in recent days would suggest that the company has gone downhill very rapidly, and is no longer a respectable organisation.

It is sad that a once respected company should be reflected so badly in the appaling behaviour of its senior managers, especially when his infantile and aggressive comments have been published into various international news groups.

Indeed, it is surprising that the services someone who exhibits such silly and infantile outbursts into the public fora that are NG should be retained after giving the company such a bad press.

So, Mr Nedlar (obsolete). At some time in your obsolete life you took some time out to pass an obsolete test so that you could PLAY with some obsolete code and with no doubt some obsolete radio equipment?

You must be so proud!

Eric Williams, M3EJO, both in his current incarnation, and in his previous incarnation of "Micky Taker", illustrates so well why anybody who holds, or who has ever held, a licence issued under the gangrenous degeneration that is the M3/CB Fools' Licence scheme will _NEVER_ make it into the ranks of _REAL_ Radio Hams with their gentlemanly traditions. Having failed to make any grade other than that intended for 6-year-olds, he sneers like a playground loser at his betters who have achieved qualifications that he so dismally failed to acheive in the 20, or so,
years that he pretended to have an interest.

Eric - once you've made the grade (Yes, we can even arrange a 12WPM Morse test for you) then you're in a position to comment.

Until then, you're just a poor loser.

Grow up.

WRONG!
I took the test that was required for me to get a licence (only one class then). What I didn't do was wait until standards had been dumbed down to a level that allowed idiots like you onto the amateur bands.
As for obselescence...well what are all these Morse signals I hear?
Perhaps we should abolish voice comms eh? After all, that's almost as old as Morse.

That's very good - I bet nobody else reading this would have thought of putting my name into Google! We can all see now why you're the MD of a Software Consultancy.

So now, having correctly linked me to senior technical sales positions within two well-respected UHF and microwave communications companies, do I still qualify as a "vile CBer" just because I have spoken out against the repeated posting of your warped self-righteous and hypocritical "Frequently Asked Questions"? Or because I objected to your belittlement of the hard work and enthusiasm shown by various members of our scout group?

If so, there can't be much hope for many of us here, can there?

Does that percentage involve individuals, or clubs, military and other licenses too?

Does that percentage include current unexpired licenses or does it also include licenses that are expired but in the grace period?

Most of all - what is the trend? Is that percentage going up or down compared to, say, 5 years ago?

How? Why?

What is being proposed is not just to close off the existing Technician license but to replace it with a better entry-level license class.

> As of mid-2000, the Technician Plus license class was ALREADY

Since then, all those Technician Pluses who renew are getting Technician licenses. That's one big reason the number of Technicians keeps growing.

When you say "expirations", do you mean licenses that are out of the grace period or licenses that are in the grace period?

"Defacto" is the key word there.

Actually the Technician was the entry-class license of choice well before it lost its code test in 1991. The reason was the FM-and-repeater boom of the 1970s and 1980s.

Agreed!

You seem to miss the entire point of amateur radio, Len, with statements like that.

> That it MUST be done with a long period of "apprenticeship?"

Not at all. The point is that it makes sense for there to be a license
that offers an easier entry point than the testing needed for a full-privileges license.

If someone wants to study up and pass all the requirements for a full-privileges license
right away, fine. Let them 'get their Extra right out of the box' - if they can!

> Radio communication is one button-push "more advanced" than

With some radios, yes. With others it's a bit more. Are you qualified to operate my Elecraft K2, Len? I think not! Nor are you qualified to operate
any of the Southgate series of receivers, transmitters and transceivers....

Actually, Jim, I am suggesting ditching the so-called "entry level" entirely. Close the Tech to new issues (of course existing Techs could keep renewing at that level and privileges if they wish or they could upgrade).
The General requirements are NOT unreasonable for a person to pass as their first license. Then if they want more, they can upgrade to Extra.

This would be a two license system: General and Extra.

There material covered on the General test is only very slightly harder than the Technician material. Of course the test would need rewritten as right now the RF safety questions are covered on the Tech but not General exam and this material would need blended in for example.

If the NPRM on code testing goes through as written, the active Techs will quickly upgrade to General as will most new Techs that come in after the change. Although the inactive hams won't upgrade, I really don't think that is relevant to how many license classes we need.

No one has yet satisfactorily explained why we will continue to need an entry level license. The arguments for it seem to really be based on the notions of the past.

I now have a handheld for 70cms, and so dug it out, and put it together.Worked first time of powering up, but think I may need to beef up the heatsinking. It is so nice to spend my time increasing my knowledge of ham radio, instead of kicking others for any shortfalls they may have!!! (perhaps, to help and educate is the way forward?????) Ah, well, night, night, and back to 4 meters for me....

Bad idea, Dee. IMHO.

What you're proposing is that the General become the "entry level" class.

> The General requirements are NOT unreasonable for a person to pass as their > first license. Then if they want more, they can upgrade to Extra.

What is "reasonable" depends on the person. The General written doesn't look like much to you or me, but to someone with no real technical background, particularly a young person such as a typical middle-schooler, having to go from zero to General can be a big leap. Sure it's been done - but is that the best way to attract new hams in the 21st century?

The old Novice did its job admirably for most of its existence - it offered an easy way to get started, and incentives for those interested to learn more. That concept is still valid today, even if the implementation is different.

That's K0HB's point, I think.

> This would be a two license system: General and Extra.

Trouble is, the General would have to cover an enormous amount of information because of all the privileges granted. Again it may not seem like much to you or me, or to someone with a technical background, but to the true beginner in radio it can be a big leap.

Heck, we've had a self proclaimed 'PROFESSIONAL IN RADIO' say he way going for Extra straightaway, but after six years - no license ;^?

> There material covered on the General test is only very slightly harder than

And the result is a pretty big pile of info for a raw beginner - unless the writtens are watered down even more, as proposed by NCVEC and others.

> If the NPRM on code testing goes through as written, the active Techs will > quickly upgrade to General as will most new Techs that come in after the

Maybe. Or maybe not. Consider that since 2000, everyone who ever held a Novice or code-tested Technician could get a General with no additional code testing. Pre-March-1987 Techs could even do it with no additional written testing. Yet every month we see large numbers of Tech Pluses renewed as Techs.

> Although the inactive hams won't upgrade, I really don't think that > is relevant to how many license classes we need.

There are all kinds of inactivity. Some will never be active again, others may simply be temporarily inactive due to school, work, or other life events.

> No one has yet satisfactorily explained why we will continue to need an > entry level license. The arguments for it seem to really be based on the > notions of the past.

Here's why:

A big factor in getting people involved in any voluntary activity is how much investment they need to make in order to get started. If you make the entry requirements high, you get a few people. If you make them too low, you either get a short-lived fad, or you get a high dropout rate of people who don't know enough to do well in the activity.

I'm a runner, so I'll make a running analogy.

Years ago, the marathon (26.22 miles) was a running event with very limited participation. It was considered a distance that only supermen could conquer. (Women weren't even allowed to enter marathons back then - ask Kathrine Switzer).

Then came the running boom of the 1970s and '80s. Road racing became all the rage, at distances from 5000 meters to the marathon. All sorts of folks were (and are) lacing up running shoes and running those races. Most runners start out with relatively short distances, and relatively low speeds. Some never did much more, while others discovered they could do longer races and higher speeds.

Participation increased so much that races like the Boston and New York City Marathons, that used to take all entrants, had to add entry requirements because the courses and resources couldn't handle the demand.

End result has been a lot more people, of all ages and abilities, running races and sometimes even winning them. A big factor is the fact that there's a wide range of distances, courses, and races to choose from.

And the record times began to fall. Not just the world records, but the age-group records and the course records - at all distances. Many more people are running today than before the boom that brought all those different races.

Of course there were and are people who run a marathon as a first race. But isn't it a lot better to have a wider choice of distances?

Yes, the analogy isn't perfect. Running doesn't require a license, and usually doesn't use up a limited resource. (Popular races like Boston and NYC are the exception).

Not having an entry-level license is like having only one race distance.

I joined W&D well after their activities with amateur radio, though there remain many licensed amateurs, both within the company itself and the network of distributors.

The remnants of the amateur products were divested lock, stock and barrel to G3TUX. Unfortunately Chris closed his business and retired to Guernsey last year, so the only place you'll find W&D amateur products sold now is on eBay.

It's a shame, but the reality is that us radio hams are congenital tightwads!

Given the representation of Amateur Radio given by one contributor to these NGs, it's a wonder any sensible professional organisation has anything to do with it.

The professional engineer, and many overseas Amateurs, must suspect that the rot set into British Amateur Radio some time late in the G4 series, and could be forgiven for avoiding contact with it as far as possible.

W&D's reputation has probably never stood higher. Professionals understand that; some Amateurs can't even tune up an FT101 properly. How technically inept must they be?

But would it really be that big a leap? Look at what the original Novices had to do. If I remember reading correctly, in the beginning they had to build a transmitter. Isn't that a heck of a big step to get started?

Take a good hard look at the material that is tested on the Tech and General exams. Much of it is repeated on both exams. Today if the candidate actually learns the material presented in "Now You're Talking" and in addition memorizes the General band privileges, he/she is likely to pass both exams at the same sitting without actually going through the General study guide.

For the raw beginner, it's that initial pile that is big. Adding the General info is peanuts since much of it is duplicated from the Tech.

Typically this is the inactive ones and they don't know all that they now need to do is take the General written. I've run across many hams that were inactive, get involved again, and when they hear that their Tech Plus or Novice gives them all the code credit they need, they upgrade very quickly.

We are already seeing the phenomena resulting from making the requirements too low. Those who got licensed 10 years ago for family communications (before cell phones became reasonably available) are typically not renewing.
Yes a handful found radio interesting beyond that and continued on but mostly they went by the wayside when cell phones became relatively cheap.
As far as the people who don't know enough to do well, making a simpler entry level license goes in the wrong direction! Lack of knowledge is cured by more study not less and by getting them hooked up with elmers to mentor them through the problems that we all faced in the beginning.

It would seem to me that the entry level testing therefore isn't hard enough.

You mention starting with shorter races and yes that is a good approach. But did they take the shortest races and make them shorter yet? Did they make races only a block long because some of the people hadn't trained enough to do a regular race?

In my opinion, that is where the analogy falls down. The current Technician license isn't really satisfactory while the various proposals put forward give too many privileges for too little knowledge. This has a high possibility of the new ham getting discouraged since he will have neither experience nor book knowledge to help him over the difficulties in getting going.

No such thing. The original Novice examination was very elementary, no schematics to read (or draw), no equipment to build (there was never ANY amateur examination which required the applicant to build equipment!), and no calculations required.

I have a copy of the License Manual, and here are some representative questions:

"What is the log of an amateur station, and what information is required to be entered therein?"

"What is the maximum permissible percentage of modulation of an amateur radiotelephone station?"

"What is the relationship between a cycle, a kilocycle, and a megacycle?"

"What instrument is used to measure: electrical potential; electrical current; electrical power; electrical energy?"

"What is a frequency multiplier?"

"What is the purpose of a key-click filter and when should it be used?"

"What precautions should be taken to avoid the danger of shock from high-voltage electrical circuits?"

"What are the undesirable effects of overmodulation in radiotelephony?"

> Isn't that a heck of a big step to get started?

No, it was a tiny step, and it had the exact result intended --- a ton of new hams "put their toe in the water". The dropout rate was high (around 60% IIRC), but we got a lot of new hams in the 50s, 60s, and 70s who would have never even attempted the tougher Technician/General examination.

Just a clarification, not sure where you (Dee) got that idea... There never was any requirement that a Novice build a transmitter.

There was never a US amateur radio license requirement to build anything. Some other countries, like the USSR, required that a prospective ham build equipment and explain how it worked, as part of the license process.

Actually, a lot of Novices did build their own transmitters. And receivers too. Perhaps in the New Year I shall rebuild the Southgate Type 1....

One big advantage of the limited Novice privileges was that a relatively simple setup could be competitive. Since there were only a few bands, low power, and crystal control, a "Novice gallon" transmitter usually had only two or at most three stages. A simple oscillator transmitter could do wonders on 80 and 40 meters. The Novice with a 25 watt rig was less than an S unit down from the one with 75 watts. Etc.

I don't know if the dropout rate was that high, but the point was that it did bring in a lot of folks who could then get an idea of what ham radio was all about.

But nobody had to start with Novice. Only the pre-1953 Advanced and pre-1975 Extra required prior amateur radio experience.

And a biggie is how is a simpler entry level license going to get people into the hobby if the don't even know it exists! I've not had a single person tell me the licensing requirements were too hard or not worth the effort. On the other hand, I get a lot of "ham radio? What's that?"

35th Edition, Copyright 1955, cover price 50-cents.

Only eighty pages included the Q&A study guides for all three exams (Novice, General/Technician/Conditional, and Amateur Extra), plus the complete text of Part 12 of the FCC Rules and Regulations. While we hear tales about how "tough" those exams were (mostly from people who never took them), a cursury glance through them this evening alongside the General and Extra exams of today, and the "difficulty" is grossly exagerated by most accounts. If anything, considering the narrower scope of the subject matter, todays examinations are probably more difficult for the "non-techie" applicant.

On review, that sentence is misleading.

I should have written:

todays examinations are probably more difficult for the "non-techie" applicant."

Oh yes. I was one of them. There were many others.

Part of the attraction of amateur radio for many of us was and is taking a pile of what some would call 'junk' and turning it into a working radio station capable of worldwide communication.

In the sense that those with a lot more resources didn't have that much of an advantage unless they had more skill too.

The old 75 watt input limit meant that the best Novice rigs might put out 50 watts on a good day. That's only an S-unit above 12 watts out, and you could get 12 watts out of even a simple one-stage oscillator transmitter. IOW the lowpowered Novice wasn't that far below the top-of-the-line one.

Xtal control meant there was no advantage to a transceiver and no need for a VFO.
Novices learned to tune the whole subband listening for replies.

Of course the most important part of the station is the antenna, and the Novice had no restrictions on antennas.

One way was to ask them.

Of course! I've been saying that for years. The Morse Code test issue is
a red herring compared to the publicity issue.

I have - here on rrap.

On the other hand, I get a lot of "ham radio? What's that?"

Yep.

Of course when ham radio is explained to most people, the next question (in my experience) is usually "why do you want to do that?" Most people aren't interested in radio for its own sake.

But a few are interested, and it is those few who we need to inform.

As a late G4 callsign, and therefore, it seems, being responsible for the rot that has set into the hobby, I wil inform you a little of my background, Stuart. Having joined the RAF after leaving school, I trained for two years at No:-1 Radio school, RAF Locking, as a Ground Communications engineer. I left RAF Locking, and was posted to RAF Cranwell. Upon leaving the forces, I continued in the domestic electronics trade, (TV, video, computers, etc,) I have 'fiddled' with electronics all my working life, (I am now in my 50's), and have half-filled my house with wonderful bargains, and homebrewed kit, as the love of my life will testify. I have ferric chloride stains on most of the carpets, a well-scorched bench, (soldering iron.....) and, not only can I tune my FT101B, I have also modified it to accept 6146B valves in the output stages, as the cost, and availability of the 6JS6 'bottles' became silly.
I do admit to having held a class B callsign, (G8ZWI) , and cheerfully admit to holding it for a large number of years, because I was too lazy to get off my backside, and do the Morse. My latest constructional project (half finished,) is a home-brew version of the Norcal Sierra, but with an AD9851 DDS & LCD in place of the normal VFO tuning. I will try to contact you, if I have any problems, although I am not too sure you will be willing to help a lowly, late, G4,

(P.S. I believe Santa Claus is bringing me a Yaesu FT817, with c.w. filter for Christmas. Should I send it back???)

For as long as you are prepared to illustrate so graphically
the difference between a CBer, an M3/CB Fools' Licensee, a CBer-Masquerading-As-A-Radio-Ham and a _REAL_ Radio
Ham with his gentlemanly traditions, I am prepared to watch you bemusedly from the sidelines and to chastise
you for your ridiculous outbursts.

It is important that we as Radio Hams make a stand for
civilised behaviour and decency against the vile CBer,
no matter how he might have slipped into our midst.

Don't you realise how silly and ridiculous you make yourself
look, by indulging in what are essentially very infantile
abusive tirades in an international forum that is broadcast to the whole world?

However, if you wish to be perceived as a Childish Broadcaster (CBer)
then just carry on as you are with your Childish Broadcasting (CB).

You, coming as you do from a background as a ship's radio
"officer", really ought to know better.
Indeed, it is difficult to see, in the light of your well-demonstrated infantile disposition, how you could ever have been the export sales manager for a well-respected company such as Wood & Douglas.

Shame on you. You should know better. What on Earth would Alan Wood G4EEE think of the bad publicity you are visiting on

Some confusion on your part, I think, because the post to which you are replying was addressed to Stuart Crowe in response to his rather silly and infantile gratuitous remarks directed at me.

You, however, seem to be F.Cooper, and the post to which you reply was not addressed to you.

With a quick GoogleMiner session, neither your email addresses nor your NNTP programs are the same.

Like a number of new contributors to this NG, you very rapidly metamorphose into an aggressive challenger, for what reason I do not know.

The answer to your question is that, yes, I never originate personal attacks, I only ever assert the right of reply, and the right of chastisement when answering posts that are somewhat infantile as I did in the post to which you responded.

It is important that any self-respecting _REAL Radio Ham makes a stand for decency and for civilised behaviour, a course of action that I admonish you, in your turn, to follow.

You don't listen to many amateur then Walt. A definite trait of the radio amateur is "short arms and deep pockets"- a positive trait in my view but still worthy of a bit of mirth. I like a bargain as much as the next man and (re)using a bit of "junk" to repair or make something is far more pleasing than flashing the credit card.

I don't see why you'd draw that conclusion, Fred, since my post clearly referred to one particular contributor. Rot generally takes time to spread, and starts out with a small area of contamination. There are still some good people coming into the hobby even now judging from the bands.

You kiddies are not real Hams. In order to be a REAL Ham you have to do what You are a LIAR.

I have _NEVER belittled any "of the hard work and enthusiasm shown by various members of" your "scout group"

I did not even know that you had a scout troop.

But since you raise the issue, if they are, indeed, scouts and are over the age of 11 years, and they have had to put in "hard work" to pass an exam intended for 6-year-olds,
then they are not achievers but retards.

If you do not wish for there to be a right of reply, then you would be better served if you do not contribute at all.

I did not say that you do not live up to my "ideal radio amateur";
in fact, I do not even use the term.

To the contrary, from what you have posted recently, you do seem to be a _REAL_ Radio Ham in (most of) the best traditions thereto.

A Merry (Belated) Solstice to you, also.

Making ham radio known to potential newcomers is ALL OUR RESPONSIBILITY if we care about amateur service continuing in the future. Today's licensing process is a hodgepodge of 3 licenses which really (IMHO) don't provide a very logical path from new beginner to Extra. That's the problem I see all of us actually discussing here. How do we make it better and more logical?

Merry Christmas to all.

Having myself done both the Novice and General/Tech written in the late 50s, Hans has it 100% correct. If I recall too, the Novice "material" was only about 12 pages in the Q&A study guide.

And remember too that at that time (50s and most of the 60s), General/Conditional conveyed ALL amateur privileges. Extra conveyed no additional privileges.

Merry Christmas to all,

Definition of a sociopath, for those who were wondering:
Diagnostic criteria (DSM-IV-TR)
The Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders, a widely used manual for diagnosing mental and behavioral disorders (see also: DSM cautionary statement), defines antisocial personality disorder as a pervasive pattern of disregard for and violation of the rights of others occurring since age 15 years, as indicated by three (or more) of the following:
- failure to conform to social norms with respect to lawful behaviors as indicated by repeatedly performing acts that are grounds for arrest
- deceitfulness, as indicated by repeated lying, use of aliases, or conning others for personal profit or pleasure
- impulsivity or failure to plan ahead
- irritability and aggressiveness, as indicated by repeated physical fights or assaults reckless disregard for safety of self or others
- consistent irresponsibility, as indicated by repeated failure to sustain steady work or honor financial obligations
- lack of remorse, as indicated by being indifferent to or rationalizing having hurt, mistreated, or stolen from another

>From the 1976 ARRL License Manual:

Study Question #31:

Draw a schematic diagram of a circuit having the following components:

(a) battery with internal resistance,
(b) resistive load,
(c) voltmeter,
(d) ammeter.

Study Question #32:

>From the values indicated by the meters in the above circuit, how can the value of the resistive load be determined?

How can the power consumed by the load be determined?

Study Question #33:

In the above circuit, what must the value of the resistive load be in order for the maximum power to be delivered from the battery?

Study Question #34: Draw the schematic diagram of an RF power amplifier circuit having the following components:

(a) triode vacuum tube,
(b) pi-network output tank,
(c) high voltage source,
(d) plate-current meter,
(e) plate-voltage meter,
(f) rf chokes,
(g) bypass capacitors, coupling capacitor.

Study Question #35: What is the proper tune-up procedure for the above circuit?

Of course those questions seem simple if someone has reasonable knowledge and experience with the radio technology of the times.

The above questions, and their answers, took up less than a page in the study guide.
How many pages of explanation would it take to teach the above material in detail?

The old LMs were not meant as standalone do-it-all books, like the newer ones.

The actual exam did not use these questions. Instead, it might show, for example, a schematic of the amplifier circuit similar to, but not exactly like, the one shown in the license manual, with 5 of the components labeled "a" thru "e".
The questions would be something like, "which component is the coupling capacitor?"
"which component is an rf chokes?" "what is function of the component labelled ''d' in the circuit above?"

Does anyone think that the current exams are tougher than that? The breadth of material has increased but the depth has decreased.

The number of questions on the exam has decreased and the nature of the test has changed.

One reason the new study guides seem impressive is that they include every possible question and answer, plus a detailed explanation of each. That's a far cry from the old LMs that only showed the general subject areas.

More proof:

Written test requirements before April 15, 2000:

Novice: 1 test, 30 questions

Tech/Tech Plus: 2 tests, 30/35 questions (65 total)

General: 3 tests, 30/35/35 questions (100 total)

Advanced: 4 tests, 30/35/35/50 questions (150 total)

Extra: 5 tests, 30/35/35/50/40 questions (190 total)

Written test requirements after April 15, 2000:

Tech: 1 test, 35 questions

General: 2 tests, 35/35 questions (70 total)

Extra: 3 tests, 35/35/50 questions (120 total)

I did this from memory so the number of questions may not be perfect, but the trend is very clear. Fewer tests and fewer questions across the board.

Back when I took the exams (1967-1970) the Novice was about 20 questions, and all of the other classes about 50 questions each. About 170 total questions.

The exact number of questions on the test was not known in advance back then, nor were the exact Q&A. Even the form of the questions in the study guide was different too. One question in the study guide might cover, say, Ohm's Law for DC circuits, which meant that the prospective ham would often learn all about that subject because there might be several questions about it on the test, and the exact form of the questions was unknown.

Most of all, without the actual tests used, and the same test environment, it's not possible to say for sure.

Of course we're not going to see a return to 'secret' tests, because FCC doesn't have the resources, nor do they see the need. And tests alone are not the only indicator of knowledge and skill, of course. There were folks who "tightened all the loose screws" in those days, too.

The thing to be learned from the bad old days was the concept of how to get people interested and involved.

Publicity is of course the #1 issue, because the license tests don't mean a thing to people who don't even know ham radio exists.

But we're talking about license requirements and privileges for a new entry-level license class. I think what's needed is a balance of modes, bands and power levels. I know that K0HB would give his entry-level licensees all modes and bands, and restrict only the power level, but that has a problem because FCC would probably then want the license tests to cover all that material.

I think one of the reasons the old Novice worked so well in its time was a synergy between the license requirements and privileges, the amateur radio literature of the time, and the technology.

The old Novice had a very simple written exam because its privileges were so limited. No VFO questions because VFOs weren't allowed to Novices. No high power questions, etc. All of the Novice band limits could be tested with four questions if you allowed one band per question. Only a few modes allowed on one VHF band, only one on HF. End result was that the beginner could focus on a few things in depth.

The ham radio literature of the time worked well too. The LM was less than a hundred pages and cost fifty cents, yet it covered all the rules and all the license classes plus the exam procedures. Books like "How To Become A Radio Amateur", "So You Want To Be a Ham", "ABC's of Ham Radio" cost a few dollars at most, were small but packed with info, and focused on getting started as a Novice. The magazines were full of articles that practically leaped from the page yelling "BUILD THIS RADIO!!" at you - and you could build them and work the world. Or convert surplus, build kits, or buy new or used manufactured gear.

Compare this to the idea that today's beginner will be handed a book costing many dollars and comprising hundreds of pages, just to get a license that lets him/her use an HT?

There's no reason to ask myself the same question.

My position here is that I'm making a stand for decency and civilised behaviour against the gratuitous and offensive onslaught of a few CBers who really ought to know better.

If more stood up for decency, things would improve.
Who was it who quotes, "'For evil to triumph it is only necessary for good men to do nothing'"?

Oohh! - it is someone by the name of , "Mike Clayton" - anybody that you know?

I find it strange that you seem to have no dispute with those who originate the most offensive of personal insults and yet you criticise those who defend themselves and stand up for decency.

There is no mention of any scout troop in what you quote.

Indeed, that you associate your scout troop with the phrases, "gangrenous degeneration" and "M3/CB Fools' Licence" is very revealing - no one but you has made that association.

Every part of the FAQ, where it criticises the M3/CB Fools' Licensees is as the direct result of encountering them and their ridiculous behaviour in this NG. Indeed, if you are responsible for training such licensees, perhaps it is from you that their anti-social tendencies arise?

Once again, you resort to rather silly and infantile forms of abuse, "pathetic sociopath" and "bitter and twisted".

Shame on you, Mike Gathergood, you ought to know better at your age, and your pubic face, which is also the public face of Wood & Douglas, does them no favours.

Grow up.

For as long as you are prepared to illustrate so graphically
the difference between a CBer, an M3/CB Fools' Licensee, a CBer-Masquerading-As-A-Radio-Ham and a _REAL_ Radio
Ham with his gentlemanly traditions, I am prepared to watch you bemusedly from the sidelines and to chastise
you for your ridiculous outbursts.

It is important that we as Radio Hams make a stand for
civilised behaviour and decency against the vile CBer,
no matter how he might have slipped into our midst.

Don't you realise how silly and ridiculous you make yourself
look, by indulging in what are essentially very infantile
abusive tirades in an international forum that is broadcast to the whole world?

However, if you wish to be perceived as a Childish Broadcaster (CBer)
then just carry on as you are with your Childish Broadcasting (CB).

You, coming as you do from a background as a ship's radio
"officer", really ought to know better.
Indeed, it is difficult to see, in the light of your
well-demonstrated infantile disposition, how you could
ever have been the export sales manager for a well-
respected company such as Wood & Douglas.

Shame on you. You should know better. What on Earth would Alan Wood G4EEE think of the bad publicity you are visiting on his company?

Grow up, Mike Gathergood!

Stupid boy.

Until we potential recruits to worry about, a "better and more logical" path is rather a moot point.

I've talked about ham radio with my friends and co-workers. Not one has yet

Bullshit. The first thing any attorney would do is tell you to make no contact with the other party except through your attorney. The next thing he would do is browse your posting history and drop you like a hot potato.

Maybe someday you'll learn the difference between reality and your little fantasy world -- but obviously not any time soon.

It is vulgar, but did you draw that line or did Mark? Everybody seems to have different lines, as you've demonstrated.

(Mark made death threats? Welp, you know what you said about people who shoot their mouth off to the wrong person. Looks like you finally got the reaction you've been begging for for so long.)

Houghton. I've been there. In 1992 I went all the way out to the end of the Keewenaw Peninsula.

Yeh. Probably costs more than Tennessee lawyers. Cost of living and all.

You're going to, or you already have demanded an apology?

What did your attorney say about these demands? If Mark capitulates, do you get your retainer back?

Yikes! Is that legal? Will they dim the lights and play music?

Now that definitely sounds illegal. Someone call the bailiff, the Sgt at Arms, somebody.

This could get interesting, you moving against Mark in a courtroom. I'm thinking of that Nextel commercial with the boombox and the "Oooh Baby Baby" song playing. Your ridiculousness cracks me up.

You ought to tone down your rhetoric and apologize to Mark before he brings a countersuit. You probably have more to lose than Mark, and this will probably make it to the Nurses Board. Not good. In the end, only your Michigan attorney will be ahead.

Merry Christmas.

The only "hobby" around is CB Radio.

Ham Radio is a technical pursuit.

Newcomers to Ham Radio are those who are naturally interested in technicalia and who drive themselves forward. Such people will have no interest in a licence issued under the gangrenous degeneration that is the M3/CB Fools' Licence scheme.

To have introduced such a scheme whose sole purpose is to maintain the profit levels of a CB (Sorry, "seedy"!) book publisher was evil indeed.

You're using the variable "r" for two very different and unrelated quantites, "right" as in "starboard" and "right" as in "correct", hence turning your proof into poop. To avoid such ambiguity, instead use the equations 3l = s (s for starboard) and -w = c (c for correct). But good luck finding a relationship between s and c.

I hope you got the message stevie

the last of th post in your daughter names have gone out from my PC

you claimed you want only exact tit for tat you got it what do you think of it?

you can prevent further demstrations of this sort by ceasing all references to people family in the NG and apologizing for them
otheriwse furtehr lessons will be delivered by me at my whim

stevei will surely give a foul typed set of reply
all making scatological references, malarke being as scatological as the word shit or feces for that matter, adn I franklym no accept that there is no defference in foulness between More stevie shit
and stevie prference
more markie malarke. the same reference is made or even if stevie
choose the tile More markie Manure, all the same to to me and I will react to it all the same ways as I find it as offenseive

when dealing with you foe you must learn to undestand them if you hope to defeat them I struggle with that with you stevie, but I have a pretty good handle on you. Indeed I would so sympathy what what I am pretty is the life of abuse you have mostly likely suffered, emotional likely physcial and sexual as well, if it were not fro that that you have allowed it to manifest in behavoir I know to be dangerous to my

No link attitude!

http://www.n9zle.com/forum/

What is it with this no-link to other site attitude?
Years ago when the internet was in its infancy just about any site would add your site as a link from theirs. In return you would do the same. But now it has come to NO-LINKS. Not even in the forums. I have had a website located on tripod for about 9 years over those nine years I had a link to qrz dot com That site received over a million hits. And many users went from that site to qrz and on-to Icomamerica dot com. I have always supported Icom. They have never given a link on their site to mine. I have always supported qrz. But of course he(AA7BQ) never put a link on his site to mine. Well you may say that "I never asked". And that is true. But recently I have noticed he has been deleting my posts. ALL OF THEM. He never contacted me telling me why. AA7BQ just deleted them. I build CIV cables and sell a few of them every week to amateur operators who want them. When I posted one on his site. I found he deleted the post soon after it was placed there.

My beliefs are.
1. QRZ AKA AA7BQ no longer has the amateur radio attitude.
2. AA7BQ has gone fully commercial but calls his site "The Ham Radio Super Site"
3. AA7BQ does not have your best interest in mind.

I can also prove what I am writing here.
For one if he claims he is nothing but a commercial site then why does he ask for donations?
If he is not a commercial site than why will he not allow me to post my CIV cables on his site?

That takes care of number 2
Now for number 1 and 3. If some one knows the truth about something but keeps it from you he is a liar.
No mater how you put it, he is a liar. On the QRZ site Fred is there to help you renew your license. Or so he leads you to believe so. He charges you for it. Mr. Lloyd has never revealed it to any amateurs that you can renew your license or do an address change at the fcc.gov web site for FREE. Yes TOTAL FREE at the FCC web site.
The forms at the FCC web site or no harder to fill out than his.

His CD. He charges 24.95 plus tax and shipping. On that CD is data he obtained from the FCC and got it for FREE, he sales it to you. Also he has software, created by programmers like MYSELF. And MODS that have been made available from the manufactures and other HAMS like ME! I have been contributing to Amateur Radio community for greater than 10 years, and have received very little for software I created. Never complained when it was copied. I have performed and created several of the MODS for various transceivers. Never asked a penny for it. I never commercialized HAM RADIO. And NEVER took money from some one for something they could get FREE else where.

I am sure many of you would like to ask me "what I am going to do about it?" Here is my answer.

I have created an open forum on my web site http://www.n9zle.com/forum/

There you can post a link to your own site even if it is a commercial site. You can post any ham radio equipment you have for sell on the site.

You can do a callsign lookup at my site from the FCC database, not that stupid qrz thing.
I will soon put together an open source database that I will sell for the price of the CD plus the true cost of shipping. About two bucks total. Once you install the database on your system, you will be able to download updates for FREE. I will make drivers available to programmers to access the database in several different languages and operating systems. I will also attempt to make the database available on the internet for FREE to download.

I only ask for a little help from other HAMS like myself. I need a few elmers that are willing to moderate some of the forums. It is easy and you will find it fun. If you have any suggestions on new forums or sections please logon to my site and make a post.

all he has to do is apologize for" raped an old firend" and his other forgeies, and stop them in future

indeed it doesn't even have to be all that sincere of an apology in any case i will hardly belive it evn if it happens agree to stop making references to people's family and sex lifes, physcial or mental health or of course if he prefers he can leave RRAP if want this to stop without apologzing that will work too although it take awhile

the future is up to him

2751. Time for the _REAL_ Radio Ham to make a stand?

It seems that anyone of those who are involved in any way with childrens' organisations or with the inducing of children to tackle the kindergarten entrance examination (that is represented by the 6-year-olds' qualification of the M3/CB Fools' Licence) exhibit behavioural traits - infantile outbursts, deliberately insulting tirades and vicious temper tantrums - that one would expect only from the children in their care.

Is it time for all _REAL_ Radio Hams to refuse to have anything to do with such mental derangees and their charges, and institute an age bar, perhaps 16-years-old, below which we will not associate in any way?

Only then, by making it clear that young children are not, and cannot be in any way, part of the society of adult technocrats that is Radio Hammery will be be able to influence them not to attempt to join us until they have achieved maturity?

Word will soon get around if children who have been conned by the various Billies-No_Mates into going for the M3/CB fools' Licence find that no-one will speak to them.

OK I'm standing, what can we do? the problem is not the M3's but the system that let this farce happen. I don't agree with your sentiment that all M3's are freeloaders, that may have been the case when first introduced but not now. The only way into the hobby is via the new 3 step licensing but there is no real incentive to advance, a two year limit creating the provisional M3 licence would be a start - restriction of bands as in the good old us of a would be another.

You continue to utter gratuitous and deliberately offensive and insulting personal remarks in a public and international forum, when there were no personal issues _AT ALL_ in the thread before you polluted it with your "customary delusional hatemail", to use your own phrase.

You are hoist by your own petard.

Once again, you show yourself to be an adult whose behavioural traits indicate an unsuitability for association with any childrens' organisations such as the scouting movement.

No-one asked you or prompted you to originate the rather silly and infantile outburst that is quoted below.
It came entirely from the atributes of your psyche.

The reason is simple. The venerable FCC, created in 1934, is no longer necessary.

Its justification for existence was weak 70 years ago, but advances in technology since then have eliminated whatever arguments remained. Central planning didn't work for the Soviet Union, and it's not working for us. The FCC is now an agency that does more harm than good.

But that is no different than many other interests, sports and/or hobbies that are somewhat outside of the mainstream of lots of folks. I have no illusions as to my getting anymore than an occasional friend or person into amateur radio. The same is true for all sorts of other interest areas. In fact, I'd say that there really aren't many truly mainstream activities that attract large numbers other than watching TV. Even golf does not garner tremendous numbers of actual players on any given Saturday or Sunday.

When I suggest that WE (all of us that are hams) need to be advocates for ham radio and, when the opportunity does present itself, then we should be as helpful as we can in aiding a friend or co-worker who does exhibit

some interest in ham radio.

Cheers,
Hope eveyone had a Merry Christmas,
Bill K2UNK

Increase the ham radio population. Graduate another class of 10-4 trash from CB. The FCC & ARRL sold out ham radio decades ago in order to fill their own bank accounts. Wake up!

The difference between licence categories is now merely a sop to the few hams who still retain their licences and want to pull-up-the-ladder behind them in a pathetic attempt to feel superior. This is what you have just said this in several paragraphs, but my one brief sentence says it more plainly.

Having several licence classes from CB upwards (is that the right word?) is an administrative nonsense. Ofcom has already realised this, aided greatly by RSGB's incompetent bungling in trying to maintain its jobs.

The arbitary categories ARE on the way out, regardless of what you or I may say about it. We have only to wait and see.

Frank, I've been thinking about this, and you're right. An attorneey would tell him that.

But what makes you think that Steve would actually listen to the advice of his lawyer? Steve is a bully, and he would expect his lawyer to get him out of whatever trouble his mouth got him into. Notice his need to have Mark publish an apology on RRAP. Pure ego.

The next

Maybe an attorney in the Frozen North needs to pay his heating bill and would actually represent a bozo loke Steve regardless of how idiotic he is.

If the scouting groups want Gareth Alun Evans, G4SDW to STOP cross posting to your groups, I strongly suggest each and everyone of you sends an abuse report of all his messages, with headers, to abuse@network-i.net ,his ISP. Gareth operates with a fixed IP of 212.21.118.235 in his headers so should make it easier for network i to close his account.

The new announced is totally irrational and, at last, finally exposes the nonsense of the morse requirement. A Foundation Licensee could no way learn morse to 5wpm (as well as the other material) in a weekend BUT he will be let loose on HF. A far better qualified B licensee is denied access because morse is required for HF access!

Indeed, and why is it when we observe the anti-social trends in M3/CB Fools' Licences, that trend follows the infantile and abusive histories of those in this NG who have indicated that thet are part of the training schemes, the Reays, Gathergoods and Preeces of this world?

Are the L.I.A.R.'s of this world responsible for more than just technical decline?

I am required by google to have a valid email address but I do

In any case, as the email address is treated as a NULL:, I don't bother to look in there for days at a time, so you're

Major Dud isn't going to take any legal action against anyone in the newsgroup -- he maintains too many personal and professional lies to risk having them exposed and publically recorded in a court of law. In fact, his lies about his USMC and EMT 'careers' cast serious doubt on any claims about his daughter, especially when his idea of 'grief' is to plaster this sob-story all over the internet and beg for sympathy and attention; i.e, any legal representative Dudly may have is going to be a court-appointed attorney.

The FCC was created by Congress to regulate radio-frequency transmissions. That purpose is not obsolete. It is included, moreover, in international treaties or conventions to which the United States is signatory. Therefore if the FCC is abolished, something else would have to be creaated to take its place.

I have no idea why you thought this might concern the Usenet group

On 26 Dec 2005 14:28:34 -0800, an_old_friend <konstans@hotmail.com> wrote:
[a bunch of pipe dreams]

Here is the real truth: You can be charged with stalking, fined $1,000, and sent to jail for one year. If you threatened someone's life, you can be charged with a felony, fined $10,000, and spend five years in jail. Mr. Robeson won't have to spend one penny.

===(begin quote from http://www.counseling.mtu.edu/Stalking.htm)===

According to Michigan Penal Code MCLA 650.411 h, stalking is defined as:

"...a 'willful course of conduct' involving repeated or continuing harassment of another individual that would cause a reasonable person to feel terrorized, frightened, intimidated, threatened, 'harassed', or molested, and that actually causes the victim to feel terrorized, frightened, intimidated, threatened, harassed, or molested."

In this definition, "willful course of conduct" refers to a pattern of behavior made up of a series of two or more separate and noncontinuous acts which share the same purpose.

The term "harassed" is defined as repeated contact without permission, resulting in emotional distress.

Stalking takes many forms

According to the anti-stalking laws, a person can be charged with stalking for willfully and repeatedly contacting another individual, without permission, causing that person to feel terrorized, frightened, intimidated, threatened, harassed, or molested. Under these laws, assailants could be charged with stalking for repeatedly:

* Following or appearing within the sight of another.

* Approaching or confronting another individual in a public or private place.

* Appearing at the work place or residence of another.

* Entering or remaining on an individual's property.

* Contacting by telephone.

* Sending regular e-mail to you (also known as "cyber-stalking").

* Sending false regular or e-mail to other people about you (also known as "cyber-stalking").

Anyone can be a stalker!

Punishment for stalking

In the State of Michigan stalking is a misdemeanor offense. When individuals are convicted of stalking, they have the following punishment [MCLA 750.411h]:

* Up to one year imprisonment, or

* Up to $1,000 in fines, or both.

* Up to five years probation.

The order of probation may include an order to:

stop stalking anyone. stop having contact with the victim. be evaluated to determine the need for pschological evaluation or social counseling (at the stalker's expense).

Aggravated stalking

* In the State of Michigan aggravated stalking is a felony and involves at least one of the following [MCLA 750.411i]:

* One or more threats to kill or physically harm an individual -- or a member of an individual's household or family -- that causes the individual hearing the threat to fear for his or her safety or the safety of another.

* The violation of a condition of a pre-trial release or condition of probation or bond for stalking.

* The violation of a personal protection (restraining) order.

* A repeat offense.

Punishment for aggravated stalking

In the State of Michigan, when an individual is convicted of aggravated stalking the punishment is:

* Up to five years imprisonment, or

* Up to $10,000 in fines, or both

* Any term of probation (including life), but not less than five years probation.

The order of probation is the same as that of the misdemeanor, with the addition: the stalker is not allowed contact with the victim's family members or with people in the victim's household.

Options for victims of stalking

* The victim may report the incident to the appropriate law enforcement agency.

Michigan law gives the survivor up to seven years to initiate prosecution. However, the earlier the incident is reported the better the chance for prosecution and conviction. Filing a police report involves describing in detail the events that took place and providing as much information as possible about the stalker(s). The police will immediately begin to collect evidence. A victim may request that an advocate or support person accompany them during the reporting process. An advocate might be a friend, a counselor from Counseling Services or a crime victim advocate from Dial Help (482- HELP). The victim may also file a civil suit against the accused seeking monetary compensation. Legal Services of Northern Michigan (482-3908) can be helpful in this instance, particularly for students who lack the funds to pursue an attorney advocate through conventional means.

Build your case against the stalker by providing the police with any or all of the following:

* Documentation (personal journal or diary) of the stalker's activities.

* A list of contacts with the stalker (time & place, with whom, etc.)

* A record of all the verbal exchanges (quotes, letters, e-mails, etc.)

* Taped recording(s) of threatening telephone calls.

* Videotapes of the stalker's actions.

* Basic identifying information (i.e. license plate number, make of car, personal appearance).

Exercise your legal rights:

Get an anti-stalking personal protection (restraining) order from your local circuit court (this order states that the stalker is to have no contact with the victim; if violated, criminal penalties will follow). This will not only protect you, but also assist the law enforcement agency in enforcing the anti-stalking law. It also increases the penalties should the stalker violate the restraining order [MCLA 600.2950a].

You may also bring a civil action against your stalker. This allows you to sue him or her for any damage they have done, your emotional harm, and may entitle you to exemplary damages and legal fees as well [MCLA 600.2954].

Do not minimize the danger of being stalked -- many people across the country have been assaulted and even killed by a stalker they did not take seriously.

Take action and survive!

An interesting thought

I was just turning 15 in 1962 when I obtained my novice license (WN2CJV). A few years later, I obtained my general (WB2OSP). I obtained my extra class ticket along with my 1st phone and 2nd telegraph (too young for my 1st plus needed 6 months shipboard experience) along with my radar endorsement in 1966.

I would gently suggest not a change in years, but a reasonable test for the licenses. I disliked Morse at first, but ended up copying 40 words per minute perfect copy in Bainbridge, MD. for the U.S. Navy on a manual typewriter. For someone who disliked the code, I would suggest that 15 or 20 words per minute is not unreasonable.

As to theory, methinks that one should be able to solve something other than simple series/parallel circuits (multiple seats of voltage in a complex circuit) for their extra.

That aside, there should be a fairly simple exam to allow folks easy entrance into amateur radio. No need for Morse and there should be limited HF allocations.

Just my thoughts.

I go away for a little while, and look what happens: Impossible as it may seem, someone is acting even more strangely than Woger Wiseman.

Could it be the r.f. radiation that is affecting some hams? Perhaps the regulations governing r.f. exposure need to be tightened even further.

Check that interlock on your microwave oven, Markie. You shouldn't be able to stick your head into the oven and power it up in order to dry out your hair after taking a shower.

It doesn't matter what Woger told you; it isn't a good idea.

Irrelevant. Dudly lives in Tennessee (or so he claims). That makes it a federal issue which precludes state jurisdiction in both civil and criminal matters. Federal stalking violations require the stalker to physically cross state boundries, something which doesn't happen on the internet (unless someone has secretly invented some sort of Star Trek internet transporter device.....).

But let's get into this a little deeper. Stalking may be defined differently in different states, but all states have stalking laws that have two things in common: 1. The stalker presents a "threat"; and 2. That threat induces "fear".

First, the "threat". There are threats made all the time, both on and off the internet. The vast majority of those threats never amount to squat. This is even more true with internet threats since people tend to be a little more 'outspoken' when they don't have to worry about getting punched in the face (kind of ironic how easy threats are made when there is no fear of retaliation). Add to that the abusive nature of this paticular forum, the fact that Major Dud has participated in this forum for at least seven years, seen many threats made by others, and has even made a few threats himself.

Second, the "fear". Actually, the issue is how to demonstrate that the threat caused fear. This is done by showing how any reasonable person reacts to fear and comparing those reactions to the reactions of the person claiming to be the victim. After receiving a threat, does a reasonable person remain in the presence of the stalker and provoke the stalker to make more threats? Of course not. I doubt that very many UN-reasonable people would do that. But Dudly does, and he does so with an odor of conceit that, in and of itself, evokes .

There was no fear, and therefore no threat. And therefore no case.

Now that we have covered criminal stalking laws at the state and federal levels, let's try civil law. Civil cases are adjudicated by a preponderance of the evidence, -not- by reasonable certainty. That, in and of itself, pretty much throws Dudly out of court since his own behavior in this newsgroup has been..... well, less than admirable.
There have been no racial slurs against him (although he has made a couple of marginally prejudicial statements about "do-rag wearing, be-bop hopping delinquents who think that a 'drive-by' is an Olympic Sport"), so there are no grounds for federal action based on racial discrimination (-by- him; however, there might be grounds to bring action -against- him depending on what he has written as one of his sock-puppets.....).

What's left? Libel? That might be a valid argument if not for the fact that Dudly's name and reputation were disgraced by his own lies and piss-poor behavior -long- before said threat occured. No case there.

Finally, let's try the court of public opinion. This is the USA, right? Well, just how patriotic is it to have a bumper sticker that says "UAW can KMA"? Especially for a retired USMC Gunnery Sergeant (who claims to have never been a reservist yet also claims to have served with 1/24, a USMC Reserve unit)? Then there is the little issue about his claims to be an EMT yet was refused a license to pursue that "hobby". So now he cruises the streets with a scanner, a medical bag, and a light-bar in the trunk, looking for an opportunity to be a hero.
I'm sure that doesn't present a good image to the public..... do you?

If there is -any- legal action to be taken here is should be -against-Major Dud for impersonating a Marine, an emergency services official, and an FCC-licensed amateur radio operator. If you want to play the lawyer, "Cristy", then cite some law in regards to -THOSE- offenses.
If not then shut the fuck up and let Dudly reap what he has sown.

Frank Gilliland, pro se.

So they can "properly" emulate the past and all the "greats" of "the service." :-)

<insert raucous laughter here...>

I really do NOT see any "need" for any "entry level" of any kind except for the teen-agers who've been living far, far away in some remote land for too long.

Examples of two-way radio use are all around us and there have never been more texts on How Radio Works than now.

>Why "dip a toe" when you can easily just dive in?

ANYONE who has ever used a cell-phone has automatically used a little two-way radio communications device.

ANYONE who has ever used an FRS or GMRS radio has used a little two-way radio communications thingy.

ANYONE who has ever used a CB set has used a slightly larger two-way radio communications set.

All of the above cost LESS than $100 each new...

Actually, any wireless microphone is a one-way radio and those cost no more than $100 for a whole Karaoke set.

>What will the "learner"s permit actually accomplish?

It will make the old-timers feel superior and "elmerish," satisfying the control-need urges to make themselves the role model for all who come after them. It's "good for the 'service'" they will say...as if the HOBBY was some sort of professional occupation or a military arm of the country. <shrug>

"Professional lies?" :-)

Dud lied the old-fashioned way, he WORKED at it...:-)

It's too bad that he was never able to "work in" a good forgery of his "last" DD-214. Nor was he able to "work in" a single reference for his wondrous exploits over the last three decades
other than what he wrote about himself.

That's going to be a trick: Getting a "court-appointed attorney"
in a civil case! :-)

Dud won't get past the Hearing on a civil case, any state. Once the judge stops his uproarious laughing, it will be tossed off any docket.

Well, there is SOME hope...maybe Court TV (channel) is looking for some comic-relief half-hour to fill up their cable broadcast schedule? That could be a winner! Imagine Harvey Levin as the "color" man interviewing "Major" Dud (wearing his CAP poopy suit)
in a pretend-format a la Geraldo Rivera? [Harvey doesn't do the moustache thing so Dud has to wear it for him!]

ND8V's 10kc wide rantings on 14.273-14.275 were MUCH FUNNIER.....
He was on over the xmas weekend on 20M. Looks like the "old Mike" is back again folks. Like Hollingsworth asserts, "The apple don't roll very far from the tree". (grin)

ps: why don't you fartknockers here in RRAP get on 20m?
Even Dumbass Donnie was pontification and ghost talking in a drunken-stupor (?) over the holiday weekend on 14.313 and it made for very fun listening with the comments from the "peanut gallery" and stuff... Much more fun than this cyberspace key-board to key-board crap which ain't even mildly amusing.

C'mon boys! Get back on HF and STIR THE SHIT up the way we used to during the 14.313 FZ wars and the Mike and Judy Show!
Now THAT was some funny shit! Even the damm cb'ers were tuning in via SWL's for a laugh or two.

He's simply of target, huh? Do you think Hans works at Target?

I played your little game, Mark. Google came up with a number of meanings for the term "worf".

1. It is a Klingon character from Star Trek.

2. It means Waba Open Robot Framework.

3. It means Warriors of Rain Forest.

4. It means Window Operational Research Facility (ISS).

None of 'em seem to make much sense.

To paraphrase Hans: Are you in control of your faculties?

To follow up on my recent comments to you, I've made good on forwarding copies (with full headers) of all of your recent bizarre posts (using screen names of Steve's deceased family members) to both Google and MSN Hotmail. Both have responded quickly, following up their automatic e-mail responses with queries from real, live people. I'm making all of Kinda like you 2test.

Wogie, "Who says I'm Roger?" says, "Keep seeing Roger behind every post, cocksucking Davies" while all the while this sick little knee-high dwarf sees Lloyd behind every post. Look at the irony!

Roger, being an obviously disturbed fifty year old male doesn't see himself as a stalker. His entire life revolves around Usenet and the Nim Busters boards, but he is not a "stalker", at least not according to Roger.

And for Woger to call others "coiwards" (documented spelling) is the ultimate of ironies from a man who hides behind anon remailers and false accounts.

So, "Not Roger", where are YOUR cujones? You've second-guessed just about everybody here as to who you think they really are, you've posted names and addresses, alleged criminal records you falsify at will, and yet you hide in the shadows and cower behind the curtains. Still pissing your pantaloons, aren't you?

And by the way, I am STILL not Cmdr. Buss Corey.

"Professional lies?" :-)

Dud lied the old-fashioned way, he WORKED at it...:-)

It's too bad that he was never able to "work in" a good forgery of his "last" DD-214. Nor was he able to "work in" a single reference for his wondrous exploits over the last three decades
other than what he wrote about himself.

That's going to be a trick: Getting a "court-appointed attorney"
in a civil case! :-)

Dud won't get past the Hearing on a civil case, any state. Once
the judge stops his uproarious laughing, it will be tossed off any docket.

Well, there is SOME hope...maybe Court TV (channel) is looking for some comic-relief half-hour to fill up their cable broadcast schedule? That could be a winner! Imagine Harvey Levin as the
"color" man interviewing "Major" Dud (wearing his CAP poopy suit)
in a pretend-format a la Geraldo Rivera? [Harvey doesn't do the moustache thing so Dud has to wear it for him!]

LenAnderson@ieee.org

There is a new digital cable channel on line in our area that is aimed toward the elderly, most specifically the elderly suffering from macular degeneration. All sorts of vitamins, herbs and alleged "natural" cures are available for mail order. You should give it a look, Lennie.

Oh (guffaw!), that is not likely to hold much sway where you are concerned Lennie. They have all kinds of pills and potions, salves and incantations, but nary a one has a "cure" for an Old Man With His Head Implanted In His Rectum.

At the least, Lennie, your dilemma has one outstanding plus. You will always manage to keep your ears warm even in the coldest of climates. Your hearing may be severely impaired, but you will never have to concern yourself with frostbite to your ears and nose.

You're the one telling others to research the term. You've obviously not done that yourself. I've provided three alternate meanings of the term, despite the fact that it isn't my job to educate you, at least not

There's all sorts of nonsense "taught" in universities. I'm sure that any student who is considered learned in Star Trek, is well-equipped to step into the job market. There's your "enas such".

I wonder why it is that _ALL_ those associated with scouting who have responded to me on Usenet in the last few days are, to a man, rather silly and infantile and therefore spectacularly unsuited to be associated with childrens' organisations because their public behaviours are such a bad example to children?

There would seem to be a nation-wide problem here that needs to be addressed; a number of individuals whom the scouting movement should distance themselves from.

"Pete Jeffreys" below is an example of such an undesirable associator.....

Once again you respond with infantile outbursts whose purpose is to cause offence.

Shame on you.

The issues you sneer at below have been well covered - and answered - already and, despite your somewhat infantile intentions do not cause offence in the way that you intend;
they only cause amusement to those of us who are the adults and gentlemen of Ham Radio- amusement that you continue to represent yourself as a maladjusted infant.

As to the issue of harassment, I will cover that once again. I have contributed to this NG for a number of years and have consistently supported my view of what is Ham Radio, and have done that without indulging in the sorts of behaviours that are out of place with those associate with the scouts such as you exhibit below. For some reason, those from the gutter who should not be associated in any way with children (such as yourself below) choose to pick on me and proceed to illustrate very well what is the difference between those in the hobby (CB Radio) and those in the adult technical pursuit (Ham Radio). One such childish degenerate, Brian Reay, G8OSN / M3OSN subjected me over a number of years to a grossly offensive series of infantile and abusive tirades in which he accused me of sheep shagging, said that my wife was a sheep next to me in the bed, made rude comments about my children, repeated accused me of drinking methylated spirit and capped it all by posting publicly that he was deliberately harassing me and trying to wind me up. I discovered that when he was demonstrating so publicly his sexual deviation and obsession with sheep shagging that he was under training to be a teacher at a girls' school in Dartford, Kent and my indignation at his one-sided socially-maladjusted campaign boiled ove rand I suggested, in the best traditions of public responsibility that his sexual deviation made him unsuited to being a schoolteacher. Brian Reay's infantile psyche could not take having the tables turned on him and he made a deliberately misleading and perjurous

complaint to the plods to claim that I was harassing him rather than the other way around. The We'll Shite (All Over You) plods have lng had a campaign of harassment against me and took Brian Reay at his word, did not check the evidence (Especially the popsts by Brian Reay admitting to a campaign of harassment) came to arrest me in force, kicking me in the face. Now you really ought to know that it is not an arrest that indicates wickedness, especially when the matter is dropped for lack of evidence and without charges being indicted. However, your infantile disposition and desperate need to cause offence will not be bothered by a small detail like the truth, will it.
The trial of the plod Richard Fuller for assault is now scheduled for the 8th Feb at 10:00 AM at Chippenham.

Is there a general concern that the populace of Britland

I think that it is important that we do not fall into the trap of equivocating over the term, "Novice" - the Novice licence as it existed in Yankland in those days was a more advanced technical and constructional standard than the Novice Licence that ever existed in Britland and the "Birth Certificate" that is the M3/CB Fools' Licence.

You might not be familiar with the 'fettled casting' incident on uk.rec.models.engineering a couple of years or so ago.

An amazing thread, concerning a casting bought at a show, which at some point was fettled.

The complianant - no prizes! - exhibited a strange approach to Customer Relations, allegedly faulty goods, returns policies, consumer law, etc, but also kept changing his name in the thread. The reasons can only be guessed at, but one result is to avoid kill filters.

The day's expenses were ï¿½25 petrol, ï¿½8-50 entry, ï¿½126 for the kit; 7 hours driving for the round trip.

However, in the end the 7.5 lb casting wound up in the dustbin, as the OP couldn't be bothered to take it to the PO to send it off for a refund. And this is the guy who complained of a University employee wasting taxpayers money by sending an email three minutes after cop, and which therefore must have been written during works time. The VC appears to have told him to combine sex and travel (or words to that effect).

The fettled casting incident can be found here; pour yourself a scotch or three and enjoy the tortured logic:

It's not a matter of the FBI shutting you down (although Woger was causing email to be sent to their Pittsburgh office). Rather it's a matter of you being in violation of the terms of service of one or more service providers. For example, if people can get your root ISPs (such as direcpc.com - now Direcway) to deny you internet access, why then you'll have to join Woger in hiding even more carefully behind free Usenet providers like Google and usenetzone.com. It took Woger quite some time to go into hiding, because he had to lose four or five service providers along the way before he figured things out. I don't recall that he ever lost a satellite broadband provider, though.

As Worf would say: "Baktag, Ha'DIBah, mak'dar, pahtk!"

CB and Amateur radio are both "hobbies". CB is nowhere near as sophisticated and held in such high regard as Amateur radio but it is a "hobby" nontheless.

Here are a few examples of this...

From the ARRL Website,

Here's your invitation to a friendly, high-tech hobby that's got something fun for everyone! You can become an Amateur Radio operator--no matter what age, gender or physical ability. People from all walks of life pass their entry-level exam and earn their Amateur (ham) Radio license. They all share the diverse world of activities you can explore with ham radio.

From Wikipedia, the olnline encyclopedia,

Amateur radio, often called ham radio, is a hobby enjoyed by many people throughout the world. An amateur radio operator, ham, or radio amateur uses two-way radio to communicate with other radio amateurs, for recreation or self-edification.

From www.101science.com,

INTRODUCTION: You can learn more about amateur radio at the American Radio Relay League
web site. Want to know what this HAM radio stuff is all about in plain language? Then be sure to check the GETTING STARTED page. It includes information on how to become an FCC licensed amateur radio operator. For specific licensing information click HERE.

Amateur radio as a hobby has many different aspects. This is one of the things that makes amateur radio so wonderful. There are a variety of activities for everyone; men, women, and boys and girls.

From eHam.net,

Welcome to the Guide to Amateur Radio for new hams. Whether you are a new ham radio operator or are interested in getting into the exciting amateur radio hobby these pages
can be helpful as you explore the many opportunities of Amateur Radio.

From Don Irving, www.irving.org/hamradio/,

Amateur Radio, also called ham radio, is an extensive hobby that can be used for world-wide communications or for chatting with friends across a parking lot. There are even gateways between ham radio and the Internet. There are tons of fun things you can do!

All in all, everyone except a few people from this newsgroup see it as something more than a hobby. It can be a technical and very advanced hobby but it remains still a hobby. Why do people disagree and get so upset with this word?

As most people see it, CB is a Hobby, Amateur is a technical Hobby.

As for the personal abuse you have been getting I think that's more to do with your attitude and approach to others. I find, in general, if your polite to people they are polite in reply. If you are arrogant and dismissive in your attitude you will upset some people who will have a go back at you in the same manner. I have cut previous posts short in this newsgroup, not because I have lost the argument but because it's pointless continuing as the other person has no interest in your point of view (your as in whoever the poster may be) and is only looking for a one-upmanship argument (for want of a better word) which benefits no-one and in itself is a "childish" activity. Baiting people to lose their temper as some do is also a "childish" thing to do and shouldn't exist in a "Gentleman's Hobby".

I know a few of you don't want to hear this but next year im going to be taking my M3 licence to talk legally on 2 metres so keep a listen out for me. I will post my nice new M3 callsign in here when it happens.

Look after yourself during the holidays and a Happy New Year to all,
Graham

Just a point to note, before CB came along people who headed the direction of Amateur radio were classed as " Billy No Mates". Now it seems this phrase has been re-directed.
As for no-one speaking to them, you should have put no-one like yourself would speak to them as there are plenty of welcoming souls on the Amateur bands who welcome all who are genuine in the Hobby.

That said I do agree, unless supervised, youngsters shouldn't be allowed on air. But then again who am I to impose my thoughts on people. 6 year old seems ridiculously young to consider able to manage a radio station whatever their intellectual level.

Graham

Theres still the full licence to aim for. That takes a keen knowledge of Morse does it not, so its still there for those that aspire to it. As for being blind, as Pointyhead said (I think it was him) its learned through hearing and used like a language. It doesn't require sight (apart to see maybe what frequency he/she is transmitting on) so being blind could even be considered an advantage.

Be careful when parking in Chippenham, especially in Hardens Close. The Sigh.

Jurisdiction was long ago addressed, but not with the outcome you claim.

The overriding consideration is that the crime was committed by a Michigan resident while physically located in Michigan, and that Michigan can therefore prosecute the stalker, no matter where the victim may reside.

One resource which discusses this fully is available freely on the web. It is written in language simple enough for a layman like yourself to understand.

Here, let me quote part of it. N.B. the final paragraph. Emphasis added for clarity.

====(from Cyberage Stalking by Barbara Fullerton)====
Most stalker cases are prosecuted at the state and local level, so it is up to each state to provide language that will protect potential victims. Most often, first time offenders are given lenient fines or punishments. Some state laws need to be changed to offer more severe punishments. All 50 states have stalking laws, and about 42 states now have laws that include electronic communications as a harassment tool or in some way relate to cyberstalking. States that do not have laws yet are: Utah, New Jersey, New Mexico, Idaho, Nebraska, and DC. In 1993, Michigan was the first state to pass a stalking law that included the words electronic harassment. It has been a challenge for the states to find a balance between a law that involves expressive conduct and speech which is protected under the First Amendment, and laws that protect victims and forbid harassment and provide privacy.

Another problem is the accused may not be in the same jurisdiction as the victim, or where the offense occurred. But in these instances, states have broadened their jurisdiction rules to help address cybercrimes that are not part of their harassment laws, like jurisdiction. In their jurisdiction laws, courts can look at where the stalking began, various sites the messages may have passed, and the physical location of the stalker.

Nope. Haven't sent you an e-mailed copy of an RRAP re-post in 6 years, Markie.

On the otherhand I not only have copies of letters you have RECENTLY sent me, but the aforementioned RRAP posts.

The clock's ticking, Markie. Stop the use of my daughter's name in your RRAP stalkings and stop misrepresenting yourself as my wife and Exactly, Dee. After all, the current General requires only two written exams of 35 questions each, and a Morse Code test of 5 wpm.

Yep. There's a radio you're qualified to operate, Len.

Of course. Another radio you're qualified to operate, Len...

Sure. Still another of your qualifications...

Of course all those sets are channleized, one-band,
certified/type-accepted

low-power, highly regulated sets designed for users with no real skill, knowledge or understanding of radio.

There's another radio you're qualifed to operate, Len!!

But you are not qualified to operate an amateur radio station, Len

I see - there shouldn't be any sort of standards, rules, procedures, elmering, or other community in a "hobby", right? Only "professionals" or "the military" should have any standards, according to Len Anderson...

Well, Len, in a couple of weeks it will be six years since you bragged to us that you were "going for Extra right out of the box". Hasn't happened yet, though. Guess those three written tests and that 5 wpm code test are just too hard for you, eh? Yet you'll pontificate to us that there's no need for an entry level license.

2929. How many licenses should there be, why and what privileges?

Scattered around several other threads there have been several dialogs as to how many licenses the USA should have for amateur radio.

The options suggested so far seem to be:

(a) 1 License
(b) 1 License plus a "lerner's license"
(c) 2 Licenses plus a "lerner's license"
(d) 3 Licenses
(e) 3 Licenses plus a "lerner's license"

What I wonder about these is how the individual proponents of each would set the "difficulty level" of each in comparison to current Tech/Gen/Extra AND how they see privilege differences (in terms of power levels and/or band segments and modes)
in multiple license options.

No, I've not claimed any such thing.

If we accept your "logic" of what constitutes a "claim", then we can also say that by posting over 600 threatening and harrassing USENET

It appears that both you and Dudly had the same lysdexic English

The difference between state and federal jurisdiction has been argued in the courts for over 200 years and is now very well defined. That difference is reflected in the application of internet stalking laws at the state and federal levels. The passage of VAWA clearly indicates that the federal government recognizes the limitations of state jurisdiction when it comes to interstate stalking via the internet.

>The overriding consideration is that the crime was committed by a >Michigan resident while physically located in Michigan, and that >Michigan can therefore prosecute the stalker, no matter where the >victim may reside.

Wrong. If the crime was "committed" across state boundries, as would be the case if the alleged perp was in Michigan and the alleged victim in Tennessee, the jurisdiction is strictly federal -- the alleged crime can be prosecuted -only- under federal law. If you need legal precedents then I suggest you study some statutory and case law regarding postal and telecommunications crimes. And it's very likely that, in the future, states will be prohibited from prosecuting internet crimes -within- state boundries for the very same reasons that intrastate postal crimes now fall under federal jurisdiction.

States cannot "broaden their jurisdiction rules" to include other states. That's firmly established law.

And I can't imagine why you didn't include this little bit of prose your quote:

"There are some ways to help stop cyberstalking: self-regulatory, ignore the stalking, and self-protection. Self-regulatory and self-protection practices can include turning off the computer, changing your email address a few times a year, or dropping out of discussion groups."

IOW, the "victim" needs to use some common sense.

And I noticed you snipped the rest of my post. Very Dudly-esque.

sorryJim but failing to back up an opinion doesn't mean they can't,
may mean they simply choose not to bother

Yessireesir! Markie's back!

The President of the IIII....Illiterate Illinformed Idiot from Illinois.

Not THAT idiot...the ORIGINAL!

Failing to "back up an opinion", Markie, means that either the author was wrong, didn't have the facts, shot their mouth off just to be heard or doesn't have the faith of conviction in his/her own beliefs
to stand behind it.

MY OPINION is that you need to move back to Illinois and marry Todd Daugherty, N9OGL. Maybe Lennie would move back (he's originally from IL) and officiate for you? You two are cut from the same cloth...Hmmmmmmmm...maybe a bit TOO close...Forget what I said...He's probably in your bloodline and that would be incest.

On the otherhand...you might LIKE that kind of thing....Lord knows...you've certainly expressed more bizarre interests than incest before.

I didn't "snitch toad out" for his newsgroup activities other than his threats and profanities which I received via e-mail. Not all of the stupid letters I received were via his blog. The headers tell the tale and THAT'S what got him into trouble.

As for the suggestion that Todd was not responsible for the threatening letters, I look at it this way...Even if he didn't send some of them, he encouraged and incited others via his blog to act irresponsibly.

I asked him repeatedly to stop using my name and callsign on his blog, and he just repsonded with more threats and profanities.

Also, I am obviously NOT the only person who's been busting Todd's
chops with his ISP.

He played with fire...He got burnt...Oh well...

I see no merit in power limits unless the point is to drop some sorts

The folllowing is from the URL: http://www.fuckchristmas.org/

This is a F-N MASTERPIECE. ENJOY you mother-fucking assholes. (grin)

Oh man, fuck Christmas.

Seriously – are you kidding me with this “There’s a war on Christmas” bullshit? FOX News wasn’t raking in enough cash already from all the Christmas commercials for Kill ‘em All Barbie and Girls Gone Wild Brand Toddler Gear?
They had to start publishing books about some bogus attack on Christianity? And who did they pick to lead this particular charge?

John fucking Gibson. This guy has wiener written all over him.

Bill O’Reilly gets all the credit as the biggest nutcase in FOXville, but Gibson really deserves his own special wing in the happy house. This motherfucker’s embedded assignment reads “Up Karl Rove’s ass.”

What makes him such a dick? I mean, besides making a fortune by screaming hysterically about how oppressed Christians are by the other twenty percent? How about advocating bombing countries that don’t vote the way we want in their own elections? Way to encourage democracy, fuckhead.
And maybe he was kidding when he wished, on air,
that the French had gotten the 2012 Olympics instead of the Brits so the terrorists would “blow up Paris,” but it might have been just a touch over the top to call for it again on the day of the London train bombings. Classy move, asshole.

And really? That’s just scratching the fucking surface.
Anyone remember who was responsible for the bombing of the Federal building in Oklahoma City? John does: Iraq.
And speaking of Iraq, Gibson thinks Rove deserves a fucking medal for outing that CIA agent. And, like any good reporter, he wanted to burn the Florida ballots after his buddy Bush got “elected” rather than, I don’t know, count them? “Is this a case where knowing the facts actually would be worse than not knowing?” That right there is why sometimes it’s useful for journalists to go to, what do you call that fucking place? Oh yeah, journalism school.

And now he's all worked up about Christmas being stolen. What is this, the fucking Fairytale Network? It's a national fucking holiday and we're spending gobs of our hard-earned tax dollars on wreaths and lights for your special Santa day. But these bastards are all "But they call them Holiday trees!" Here's a clue: no, they fucking don't. Ok, maybe in a couple places, like on FOXNews.com and at the White House, but if Christmas is under attack, I'm Kris fucking Kringle.

And guess who's stealing Christmas, according to Gibson. Go on — guess. "A cabal of secularists, so-called humanists trial lawyers, cultural relativists, and liberal, guilt-wracked Christians — not just Jewish people." (Emphasis mine. Pure, unadulterated anti-semitism, his.) A cabal? Are you fucking kidding me? Could we try to be a little more fucking original with our Jew-hating?

Speaking of Jew-hating, Pat Buchanan has joined the hype-a-thon of the supposed Attack on Christmas, too. Or, as he put it, "What we're witnessing here are hate crimes against Christianity." Sorry? We're not so hot on paying for an inflatable camel for your goddamn nativity scene and suddenly we're Slobodan fucking Milosevic? Fuck you. Get some goddamn perspective, you little prick. When they start hunting Christians in the streets, it'll be time to start yelling "Hate crime." And no, it won't count when they start chasing you with the torches. That'll be called "The Most Wonderful Time of the Year."

And Bill O'Reilly, Gibson's cellmate in the silly shack, is doing his part to save Christmas, too. He's been going after New York's Mayor Bloomberg (that Commie) because he says the Christmas Tree at Rockefeller Center has been renamed a "Holiday Tree," and "No Christian Christmas symbols are allowed in the public schools." The only problem? Neither of those things is even remotely fucking true.

It takes some super-sized balls for O'Reilly to get all lathered up about sinners and their fictional anti-Christian crusade. Every fucking person on the planet has hard and fast evidence that Bill is a world-class pervert, but still he feels totally justified lecturing the rest of us on our moral inferiority.

How fucked up is Bill O'Reilly? Pretty fucked up. Everyone got so crazyfaced about him confusing a sponge and a Middle Eastern snackcake (pretty fucking funny, mind you), that they missed the scary bit: what he meant to say. Old Bill wanted to get all funky on his intern like this: (you'll excuse my foul language, I'm quoting an award-winning newscaster here) "I'd take the other hand with the [loofah] thing and put it on your pussy."

loofah (lū'fə) noun. A natural exfoliating sponge.

exfoliate (ĕks-fō'lē-āt') verb. To remove (a layer of bark or skin, for example) in flakes or scales; peel.

That's right. Bill O'Reilly, fount of morals, is super familiar with the female anatomy. So much so, that he knows how good it feels to have one's pussy exfoliated. We're talking h – o – t, Hot.
That's exactly who I'm going to for my life lessons.

Sorry, where were we? Oh yeah, fuck Christmas.

Can we back up just a couple steps here? At what point did a basic understanding of the separation of church and state become a fucking war on religion?
And how did we get to the point where you can call an organization set up to defend our civil liberties
"Terrorists" on national television and no one fires
your ass? Enough. Fuck all of you lying little shitheads who wish the world was out to get you so you could play the poor oppressed victims. Wake up assholes
— you're the cowboys, not the fucking Indians.

"But we want to display our Christmas tree on city property!"
You can, go right ahead. "They're stopping us from praying in school!" They're not, so fuck off. "We're not allowed to say 'Merry Christmas' anymore!" Are you fucking kidding me? Knock yourself out. Say it at work, scream it in your high school lunch room, hell, tattoo it on your fucking g-ddammed slooped forehead for all we care.
Guess who's gonna be there defending your right to do every one of those things? The fucking ACLU. One of these days you bastards are going to drive those fuckers out of business, and then you'll see some actual attacks on your religious liberties. I thought conservatives were supposed to be all proud and independent?
When did they turn into a bunch of fucking crybabies?

Let's back up even fucking further, shall we?
Can anyone tell me how old Christmas is? Anyone?
Two thousand years, give or take, right? Gee, who's been reading their No Child Left Behind History Textbooks?
Try fucking four thousand years. Huh. Twice as fucking long as your little baby king has been around. How could that possibly be, unless. . . waitaminute. . .

Christmas isn't fucking Christian. Ok, now we're talking.

That’s right, that Yuletide cheer you’re spreading? What exactly do you think Yule is? It's the fucking Pagan celebration of solstice.
And those “Christmas” traditions? They’re not just like Pagan rituals, they fucking are Pagan rituals. Way before your Jesus got all magical with the bread and fishes, the Romans were celebrating the birth of Mithra on . . . guess? Go on – guess.
December fucking twenty fifth. What a weird coincidence, eh shithead..?
Practically the whole thing is ripped off from the fucking Druids and the Romans. Twelve days? Check. Exchanging gifts?
Check. Mistletoe? Check. And you’d better fucking believe that those decorated trees that Gibson and Co. are so bent out of shape over are as Pagan as the Rune and Crystal Shack at Pentagramfest 2005. You might as well be building miniature fucking Stonehenges in your den or rec room alongside the bar.

And don’t you read your own goddamn Bibles? Jesus was born when? In the middle of winter? Lot of Shepherds out watching their flocks around that time of year in Bethlehem?
No, because they’d be freezing their fucking asses off.
Tell you what – y’all go figure out which one of the different Bible stories about the birth of Baby Jesus® you want to believe, and then we’ll argue about whether it fucking happened like that or not.

Christians just stole a bunch of traditions from other cultures, slapped them together, stuck a fucking tinfoil star on top and called it the Most Important Holiday of the Year. Modern American Christmas makes Michael Jackson look positively organic.

But you boys at FOX still freak out every year about how everyone's out to get your special trees. This is really the most important thing you have to talk about? Whether Target says Happy Holidays or Merry Christmas?
Here’s a brainstorm: there’s a fucking war on. Our soldiers are out there dying in an Islamic shithole Country while you guys do your 14th live feed of the day from WalMart to show us what good little consumers we are. What Would Jesus Do?
He’d jump over that newsdesk and kick your ass for that shit. Are you sure you want to hang your journalism credentials on a story about what some guy calls a tree?
They should break one of the branches off and shove it up his arse raw and with the splinters still intact.

Well we’ve fucking had it. You want to play bullshit games and scream about how God’s fucking judgment is gonna come raining down on us if we don't start watching our vocabulary? Go right the fuck ahead. But let me clue you in on something: fire and brimstone ain’t no deterrent for us. We’re not going to hell, assholes, we’re fucking in hell. We live with you.

And fuck Easter too, you fertility-rite-celebrating,
whiny, self-righteous, don't-know-the- history-
of-your-own-religion assholes.

Fuck off.

:)

Have you apoligized to Mark for incessantly referencing his sexuality

Why can't you answer Marks question; "What does Mark's sexuality have

I think that I am someone who makes a stand for decency and for civilised adult behaviour in the international public fora that are the Usenet news groups, and who speaks out consistently against personal offensive insulting tirades that have no place outside of the school playground, and in this context that have no place in the persona of those who would seek to set themselves up as an example for vulnerable children to follow.

Who do you think you are?

Good. Then you understand that neither Mark's nor Todd's sexuality has anything to do with amatuer radio and RRAP.

Why have you bring it up so often on RRAP?

You have claimed he is gay. You've not claimed it is relevant to this newsgroup, which is probably why you can't answer Mark's question,
"What has Mark's sexuality to do with amateur radio?"

You should answer Mark's question or offer him an apology (if he'll accept it at this point).

And there is the famous Robeson bullying. Robeson can post hundreds and hundreds of posts claiming all sords of things, demanding all sorts of thigs, and his postings are not stalking, threatening, nor harrassing. It's just meek little Steve in do-gooder flight suit. But should anyone else give it back to him he requires them to have mental health evaluations, voluntary or OTHERWISE.

I recall a "Dialing..." threat from you a while back.

Why do you make such a fool of yourself?

OK, let's see if I have this straight: You were activated from the reserves in 1990, sent to Pendleton for workup, then shipped to Okie where you sat out Gulf War I in relative comfort. But you couldn't hack active duty even in garrison, so you came up with an excuse to get discharged early. Now if I can just remember the nature of the excuse you used..... was it medical? psychological? alcohol abuse?
spousal abuse? family hardship? Help me out here, Dudly.....

Did you start a new thread about Todd's sexuality? Yes

Did you claim he was gay? Yes

Did you start a new thread about Mark's sexuality? Yes

Did you claim he was gay? Yes

By posting such stuff are you making a claim that sexuality is somehow relevant to amateur radio?

If not, why do you post such things to an amateur radio newsgroup, (which is the question that Mark has posted to you repeatedly)?

Why can't you answer Mark's question?

License exam at the present General exam level, Called Amateur. All privs, 10 year renewable. Just like way back when.

Leaner's permit called Limited, nonrenewable, ever. Term is 2 years. No grace period. If you want back in, you pass the "General" exam.

Limited to 100W ERP on HF, except 5MHz limited to 50W ERP, and 50W ERP on VHF+.

Participation on 5MHz limited to emergency training nets and emergency nets.

All mode privs except power, no automated or robot stations, no repeater control.

Thanks for asking.

Absolutely hysterical, but I don't believe Gareth wrote any of that,
and here's why. In his regular drivelXXXXX sorry FAQ, he always writes:
"Ham Radio is a technical pursuit for those who are interested in the science of radio wave propagation and who are also interested in the way that their radios function. It has a long-standing tradition of providing a source of engineers who are born naturals."

But the person who so publicly demonstrated his stupidity in that thread stated from the outset: "Incidentally, it was not I who pointed out the error, but a qualified engineer who was also thinking of buying one"

Gareth, as we all know, is a "real radio ham", so why would he need to get the opinion of a qualified engineer?

Must've been somebody else, Shirley?

That's just the beginning, Bill.

The devil is in the details, limited by what FCC has written in various NPRMs and R&Os:

- No existing licensee should lose privileges
- No existing licensee should gain privileges without taking the required tests
- No free upgrades
- No significant extra admin work for FCC
- FCC sees the optimum level as 3 license classes, none of which have a limited term and all of which are renewable.

How does any proposed system handle all these requirements?
How do we convince FCC to accept the changes?

Those are the tough ones!

K0HB's proposed 2 class system addresses all these issues. But FCC denied his ideas.

My kids school no longer has x-mas plays. They are not allowed to pray in school. In her religion class, they do not study any form of Christianity. Bill O'Reilly was cleared of the sex allegations,and if you would have kept up with that bit of the news, you would know that Bill O'Reilly's lowers WANTED them to release the alleged tapes because there were none. I could go on, but it would be a waste of bandwidth and your going to believe what you want no matter what I say.

"FREEPORT, OH/GLENDALE, WV: The FCC wrote Advanced licensee Steven A. Tunder, N8WGM, and General licensee Roger L. Wiseman, KC8JBO, on March 29, 2000, advising that it had been made aware of "an ongoing personal dispute" between the two men that included allegations of interference or jamming on 20 meters. FCC Special Counsel for Amateur Radio Enforcement Riley Hollingsworth cautioned Tunder and Wiseman to review §97.1 of the Amateur Radio rules and "to make certain that whatever disputes that may exist are not carried over to Amateur Radio frequencies." Hollingsworth invited the two licensees to contact him to discuss the matter. Last November 9, the FCC sent Wiseman a Warning Notice in response to allegations of deliberate and malicious interference on 20 meters."

"GLENDALE, WV: The FCC requested July 11, 2000, that Roger L. Wiseman, KC8JBO, retake the General examination elements under the supervision of an ARRL-VEC volunteer examiner team. Wiseman must appear for retesting by September 11, 2000, or his license will be canceled. Applicants appearing for re-examination are granted an Amateur Radio license consistent with the elements passed. The FCC had written Wiseman on March 29, 2000, advising that it had been made aware of "an ongoing personal dispute" between Wiseman and another licensee that included allegations of interference or jamming on 20 meters. FCC Special Counsel for Amateur Radio Enforcement Riley Hollingsworth invited the two licensees to contact him to discuss the matter. Additionally, the FCC had sent Wiseman a Warning Notice last November in response to allegations of deliberate and malicious interference on 20 meters."

why?
one stevie will not do it, he will spend then next few years lying about how he never threatened to two, if he did he doesn't have a case

the only thing to worry about from stevie his his effort to incite people agianst others with his poisonous posting about people, that and that he might go apeshit and drive up here, but then I doubt he could find the place, in some of his posts he said that chaseel was near marquette

I rather he brought it on and we had it out in court than continue his
micky mouse games

They must be starved for new teaching materials in modern lit. Do you

It's Klingon, Hans. Consonants are optional, vowels doubled and the nines are silent.

I thought Mark explained that the boy cried, "Q" and went on to do something about a deed.

He just told us that he failed the 5 wpm morse exam more than 100 times.

How many letters should be changed to turn "preveidence" into an English word.
Let me guess, did you mean "providence"?

Could it be that he was out of his depth, and needed advice from someone with experience? His approach to the FT-101E neutralising problem was similar in that he got rid of the offending article. Come to that, we haven't heard much about the FT-707 project either - but at least he did ask for help with that, even if the replies were said to have been lost due to one of his ISP failures.

Its quite amusing how some of the fraternity in here who have a Full Licence think they can repair a radio. A lot can yes but there's also a lot of Amateurs who hold full licences who, for one reason or another, can't fix their radio. Be it shaky hands or impaired vision, no real skill with a soldering iron or simply not wanting to bother and let someone else repair it for them. Not all Full Amateurs can fix their radios even though they will tell you they can.
There are plenty of search results on google or Yahoo or probably any other search engine you would care to name that would reveal appropriate information be it CB or Amateur for the repairman. Its a shame they just can't ask for help and everyone join in in a helpful discussion which is how it should be.

Fortunately, the ability to fix a radio is only one facet of Amateur Radio, and not a compulsory one at that. There are Amateurs about who don't do moonbounce or MFSK or aerial experimentation - Amateur Radio is a broad church.

Well, one chap asked for help concerning a problem with an FT-707, and received a number of helpful replies. It was a pity that he was the only user on ukra of that particular ISP to suffer an ISP failure and consequently never saw them. Presumably in those days he didn't know how to Google the archives. Me too, even some of the shops technicians weren't as good as they thought they were.

Some want to be treated as Amateurs, others as in many walk of life, couldn't be arsed as long as they can use it.

> Ho hum...

I find it surprising that the Full licence requirement no longer requires Morse. It seems to be on a self destruct course which is a shame as most of you hard working Amateurs Full licence's seem to have been belittled by this. If a Full Licence doesn't require Morse then the licence doesn't mean as much. I think that is a mistake. Technical competence seems to be a bygone word.

Still, worse things happen at sea....

Absolutely which is why it amazes me so much "hype" is placed on Morse by the Higher Licence fraternity. It's a part of Amateur radio but theres so much more.....

It surely is. I had a few replies to some of my questions direct to my mailbox as they didn't want to be shot down by some of the Preachers in here. There are a lot of helpful and intelligent people on Amateur and in the groups who don't like the actions of a few so rarely post and that is a great shame....

Wiseman, KC8JBO, on March 29, 2000, advising that it had been made aware of "an ongoing personal dispute" between the two men that included allegations of interference or jamming on 20 meters. FCC Special Counsel for Amateur Radio Enforcement Riley Hollingsworth cautioned Tunder and Wiseman to review
97.1 of the Amateur Radio rules and "to make certain that whatever disputes that may exist are not carried over to Amateur Radio frequencies." Hollingsworth invited the two licensees to contact him to discuss the matter. Last November 9, the FCC sent Wiseman a Warning Notice in response to allegations of deliberate and malicious interference on 20 meters."

"GLENDALE, WV: The FCC requested July 11, 2000, that Roger L. Wiseman, KC8JBO, retake the General examination elements under the supervision of an ARRL-VEC volunteer examiner team. Wiseman must appear for retesting by September 11, 2000, or his license will be canceled. Applicants appearing for re-examination are granted an Amateur Radio license consistent with the elements passed. The FCC had written Wiseman on March 29, 2000, advising that it had been made aware of "an ongoing personal dispute" between Wiseman and another licensee that included allegations of interference or jamming on 20 meters. FCC Special Counsel for Amateur Radio Enforcement Riley Hollingsworth invited the two licensees to contact him to discuss the matter. Additionally, the FCC had sent Wiseman a Warning Notice last November in response to allegations of deliberate and malicious interference on 20 meters."

But yet the social misfit maintains that there is NOTHING in the letter that stated anything about malicious interference.
What part of, " in response to allegations of deliberate and malicious interference on 20 meters." does Roger think we do not understand?
Hmmm...I don't see a single mention anywhere in these articles that alludes to Roger being "invited" to retest because he was initially tested via the VEC program, as Roger claims. I do see comments made about "jamming", "interference" and "deliberate and malicious interference".
Of course that is Roger's story, and he's sticking to it. He never could tell the truth.

Ahhhhhh, yes....About what I'd expect from Lennie the Lame.

Don't help anyone else...Don't share what you know...Don't pass around your enthusiasm for something you think is exlcusively YOUR domain. But of course BERATE anyone who suggests the idea of it...

Guess this is why Lennie has always steered clear of the question "How Many Young People Have YOU Mentored In Radio Or Electronics?" while at the same time proposing an "age limit" where there's never been a demonstrated need for one...

Already done.

Sure I do. Under Michigan law, the attorney could not bill for the retainer if, after having reviewed the complaint and assessed it's validity against Michigan law, it was determined to not be a valid complaint. (Mind you I said "complaint", not whether it will be ajudicated in my favor or not...)

> the only thing to worry about from stevie his his effort to incite

Well, Markie, after your behaviour in the last 30 days, I'd say the pattern of who's inciting what has been established...And your use of faked screen names in the name of dead family has pretty well established who's "poisoning" the pot.

> that and that he might go ape#### and drive up here

As much as I want to avoid that, I am told it IS an eventuality.

> but then I doubt he could > find the place, in some of his posts he said that chaseel was near > marquette

First of all, there's no "chaseel" in Michigan, Markie.

Secondly, Marquette is only 30 air miles, probably and extra 15 driving miles since it's not a straight line to get to "Chassell" from there.

Since the continental United States is about 3000 miles by 2500 miles, I think the average person would consider thirty miles, give-or-take, as "near".

> I rather he brought it on and we had it out in court than continue his
> micky mouse games

Count on it.

And Mark, to answer your subject line question "again stevie who is your attorney so I don't throw his letter as junk mail", rest assured that your copies of the complaints will be delivered by an officer of the court, not the United States Postal Service.

I read it, I disagreed with it. I don't have a need to call Len names over it.

What's your problem?

Elmering can occur only if there's a "learners permit" in place?

That's Len. He's not suggesting that Dee have windows smashed with bricks, tires slashed, nor hubby terrorized.

You won't find Len posting such crap.

Guess this is why Steve has always steered clear of the question "What has Mark's sexuality to do with amateur radio?"

For example, that was a classic example of Argumentum ad Hominem of the abusive variety, also known as the Genetic Fallacy. According to Copi:

"The way in which this irrelevant argument may sometimes persuade is through the psychological process of transference. Where an attitude of disapproval toward a person can be evoked, it may possibly tend to overflow the strictly emotional field and become disagreement with what that person says. But this connection is only psycholol gical, not logical. Even the most wicked of men may sometimes tell the truth or argue correctly."

Nothing. It's just another Genetic Fallacy. This one falls into the category that I like to call "Rovian" since, according to Sen. Boxer, the supreme commander of the Shrub administration likes to divert attention away from their failures by inciting public discord using the three 'G's..... "God, Guns, and Gays".

Sad that he brings down the world of amateur radio to the lowest common denominator.

Steve has to go get one NOW, since Mark called his bluff.

Time for Steve to actually start writing checks.

Then Mark counter sues, and sends another package of harassment (raped an old friend) to the Tennessee Nursing Board.

Steve writes more checks in an attempt to use the courts to cover up his mistakes.

For the learner's permit? To simplify the body of knowledge for operating and for the exams, and for operational safety. Harm is not always immediately apparent and may take years of exposure to show itself. The lower power limits allow the learner to forego the environmental assessment and still operate a station safely.

If there is no real distinction between the "Limited" and the "Amateur" licenses, then I sugest we drop the Limited and keep only the Amateur at the General knowledge level.

One license. Existing licenses would be valid until expiration with no renewals -- they would need to pass the single-license test if they want to continue.

>- No significant extra admin work for FCC

A single license would -reduce- the FCC's workload by mere simplification.

The FCC has changed it's opinion on that subject several times. IIRC, there were once six different license classes (please correct me if I'm wrong).

>How does any proposed system handle all these requirements?

It ain't rocket surgery.

>How do we convince FCC to accept the changes?

Boycott the ARRL?

None of the above is defined by any FCC rules. At the moment there are 3 licenses being issued, but even that can be changed as the FCC is not locked into their past decisions because of prior comment in any NPRM and/or R&O.

> How does any proposed system handle all these requirements?

It doesn't, nor does it have to. It becomes an issue of making athe case for whatever is being proposed. Clearly the ARRL still believes and appears to be still supportive of an entry level (learner's permit) despite what the FCC

may have already said.

> How do we convince FCC to accept the changes?

By making clear and rational arguments and reasons for whatever the proposed system may be.

> Those are the tough ones!
>
> K0HB's proposed 2 class system addresses all these issues.
> But FCC denied his ideas.

FCC originally didn't buy a nocode Tech at some time in the past but eventually changed its mind. FCC also left 13wpm and 20wpm as requirements for many years with the lack of change/elimination of said 13/20 wpm elements supposedly waiting for a "consensus" in the amateur ranks. In spite of the lack of any consensus on code the FCC did, in fact, end 13/20wpm test elements in April 2000 based on arguments and the FCC's own conclusions at that time.

Bottom line, every statement or opinion offered by the FCC
in any NPRM and/or R&O is not cast in stone and can end up being revisited and changed at a later review.

So Jim, with that in mind, what is your specific proposal?

Cheers,
Bill K2UNK

There currently are 5 grades of "General". Which do you mean?

One-Star General - Post 1987 Technician given a complimentary field promotion to General

Two-Star General - Previous Conditional given humanitarian promotion to General

Three-Star General - Pre 1987 Technician given posthumous
promotion to General

Four-Star General - General who took an actual General examination in modern times at a VE session

Five-Star General - General who took an actual General examination in front of a steely eyed FCC official in a noisy drafty government office in downtown Fargo and had to walk uphill (both ways) through 10-foot snowdrifts on Good Friday 1954.

Why in the world would you do that? Do these folks' opinions of you matter that much to you that you'd want to reveal such information to them? Did someone dare you, and in order to keep face you felt you just "had" to post it? You should never allow anyone to manipulate you in such a manner. In turn, you should not be trying to manipulate others; take what's said on here with a grain of salt, and move on to .policy issues.

When you turn off your PC, thoughts of the folks on here should be the last thing on your mind. I think more about the gecko running across my ceiling than all the nasty things that have been said about me on here over the past 14 years.

Be nice or else I'll start posting the rec.radio FAQ on here again which I helped draft back in the 90s and force your to memorize it! I don't think it has been posted in the last 6 or 7 years now.

For Jim, there is no problem so large nor complex that it cannot be run away from. We -must- be saddled with a system of licensing and privileges which are remnants of numerous OBE rules changes, according to Jim. Not only does he desire the code hurdle to remain, but he is now claiming that the FCC is the main obstacle to modernization of the service. Odd, but it is the FCC that is proposing rules changes. Jim is all about difficulty, hurdles, and obfuscation.

Why not look at the basis and purpose, then design an amateur radio service around that?

Once Steve acknowledges that Mark's sexuality has nothing to do with amateur radio or RRAP, then he will be in a position to apologize to Mark. Mark will probably stop spamming the group, and Steve will fade into obscurity.

OOK as well as all other modes require an EA. Maybe Jim hasn't performed an EA, or maybe his calcs are as accurate as his calc for the distance to the moon. Hi!

Dave, I don't recall him saying that. Can you repost that?

Steve, what has anyone's sexuality have to do with amateur radio or RRAP?

Why do you say that you didn't bring it up when it is clear that you did?

Why do you suggest an illegal union of one man to another?

Why do you suggest that Len has the authority to perform a civil marriage ceremony?

Why do you suggest that Todd or Mark are a product of an illegal union called incest?

What is wrong with you, Steve?

I mean outside of being a chronic liar.

Why? If a letter should actually come it will be fairly easy for Mark to show that Steve has been harassing Mark in this newsgroup for years.

Perhaps it is no wonder the anti-social leanings of the

Let's crunch some numbers: Our total MF/HF spectrum consists of just 3.75 MHz, with only about half of it, 1875 kHz, useful for communications at any one particular time of the day. If suddenly, as if by magic, all licensees were granted MF/HF privileges, we could possibly have 670,000 hams attempting to fill that 1.875 MHz. Okay, I'll grant you that folks have to work and sleep, so let's say at any one time, we have one-fourth of all 670 kilohams on the air, with two per QSO. That would mean each QSO would be separated by just 22 Hz.

I'll be more generous. Let's pretend that all 3.75 MHz is available all the time, with say, one-tenth of all operators on at any one time; now each two-person QSO is separated by 112 Hz. Getting better.

Worried that I didn't take into account frequency re-use? Alright, suppose we could manage three simultaneous QSOs spread across the country on a single frequency; each such grouping would now be separated by 336 Hz. That could be done if we ban phone.

I'll never understand this liberal mentality of wanting to grant everyone MF/HF privileges; it's no longer a privilege if it's something that everyone can get practically for free. We received our current spectrum total at a time (WARC 1979) when we had less than half the present number of hams. This movement of wanting to "fill up the bands or we'll lose them" is nonsense.

As Michael Savage says, "Liberalism is a mental disorder."

Read everything closely. There were three letters sent.

The letters to both Wiseman and Tunder were a preemptive "warning" that did not allege any activities. That hardly qualifies as a warning in the context of someone having actually done something.

The letter with the warning in it ALLEGED interference, and warned of consequences.

The retest letter made no reference to interference; in fact gave no reason for requiring the retest. Such a request is part of the Volunteer Examining program. It could have been made for any number of reasons that may have had nothing to do with any of the addressee's actions. An investigation into the VE group that gave the test, would be a good example.

Only one letter was a warning referring to interference.

So, yes; if you are going to tell it, tell it straight.

Watch this closely, boys and girls. We're about to be given a demonstration of "figures don't lie, but liars figure". In this case the person "figuring" is no less than a self-proclaimed university "math lecturer", so we're seeing a pro at work!

> say at any one time, we have one-fourth of all 670 kilohams

One-fourth? That averages out to 6 hours of hamming every day by every ham, or 167,500 US hams on the air at any given instant, 24/7.

Uh huh!

Get real!

The most popular US operating event is the ARRL Field Day. To date, the record number of logs submitted was 2261 in 2004. The average number of transmitters-per-log was 2.41. That works out to 2,725 two-way QSO's on the air at any time. The mix of phone vs CW runs about 60:40. That works out to 1090 CW transmitters and 1635 phone transmitters active at any moment.

Presuming a phone transmitter uses 2400Hz of spectrum and a CW transmitter uses 200Hz, and assuming your 3:1 geographical sharing, that works out to 1.38MHz of the avaliable 3.75MHz is "busy" at any given QTH, leaving 2.45MHz available for additional users, and that's on the busiest MF/HF weekend of the year!

So much for your 336 Hz per user!

>bygone word.

I find this puzzling. Please explain to me why you think a Morse Test pass at 12 wpm makes someone technically proficient? Surely a practical examination in some aspect(s) of circuit design, home construction and use of basic test equipment would be of far more value. I'd very much like to see such a practical section introduced as a replacement for the Morse Test.

I've been a CW op all my amateur radio life (ie since 1961) and for the previous 10 years as an SWL. Not once have I felt superior to the many G8 friends I have who have never taken the morse test but whose technical proficiency in electronics is far greater than mine. One very good friend of mine, a G8, is a Professor of Electrical Engineering at a well known UK University. He's written countless papers on antenna design, microwaves and the like, yet, for years, he was deprived the chance to operate on the HF bands simply because he had no interest in CW .... how ridiculous. I also know many G8s who can send and receive Morse well in excess of 12wpm but who chose not to take the morse test. They use morse on the VHF/UHF and microwave bands for weak signal work such as meteor scatter, EME, etc.... far more demanding in terms of homemade gear and antenna systems than an HF bands CW QSO (most likely using commercial gear and commercial antenna).

CW does not make you a better radio amateur but it does give some folk on this newgroup an inflated opinion of themselves. Perhaps that test and the RAE are only exams they have ever been able to pass? ;-)

Ok.....

I said nothing of the sort. You are assuming the changes would be immediate. My suggestion to allow -EXISTING- licenses to remain valid wouldn't change anyone's privileges until it's time to renew, at which time the licensee can either take the one-license test or let it lapse.

<snip rant based on incorrect assumption>
>I'll never understand this liberal mentality of wanting to grant

That pretty much describes the current state of Amateur Radio anyway;
a written test using questions that are publically available (don't even have to steal them out of the teacher's desk!), a code test at a speed slower than needed for practical use, and a fee that isn't much more than the cost of a happy-meal.

But then again, what law requires that an Amateur license must be -earned-? There isn't one. On the contrary, the law provides that any citizen who wants a license can get one, and the testing process is only a method to verify that the prospective licensee knows the rules.

So if you don't like the "liberal mentality" of the law then you should probably work to change it. Good luck.

That's a good way to get the number of US hams down to about half what it is now...

> Let's crunch some numbers: Our total MF/HF spectrum consists of just > 3.75 MHz, with only about half of it, 1875 kHz, useful for

That depends what you mean by "useful for communications".

If you're talking about DX-with-limited-power-and-antennas, the figure varies all over the place with the time of day, year, solar cycle, etc. There are times when nothing over 5 MHz is very useful, and times when all the bands are "wide open".

OTOH, if we include things like regional and local QSOs, bands that are useless for DX (80 meters at midday, 15 meters at midnight at the bottom of the cycle)
are 'useful' a lot more of the time.

Note also that 1.7 MHz of that 3.75 MHz is the ten meter band.

> If suddenly,
> as if by magic, all licensees were granted MF/HF privileges, we could

More like 661,000, actually. As it stands now, about half that number (in the USA) have lots of HF privileges (add up the current number of Generals, Advanceds, and Extras - see the thread "ARS License Numbers")

> Okay,
> I'll grant you that folks have to work and sleep, so let's say at any > one time, we have one-fourth of all 670 kilohams on the air, with two Whoa! That means every ham is on HF six hours a day, every day! 42 hours on HF per week!

A more realistic figure, I would say, is something like one hour per day per ham. Sure, there will be some who are more active, but also some who are far less active.

>That would mean each QSO would be separated by just 22 Hz.

Well, let's see....

One hour per day per ham, with two hams per QSO, and 660,000 hams, means
13,750 QSOs simultaneously. That's 136 Hz per QSO.

> I'll be more generous. Let's pretend that all 3.75 MHz is available

2.4 hours per day per ham on HF - every day? That's 16.8 hours per week.

> Worried that I didn't take into account frequency re-use? Alright, > suppose we could manage three simultaneous QSOs spread across the country

Using my numbers it works out to maybe 408 Hz

> That could be done if we ban phone.

Ah, but many 'phone QSOs are round-tables with more than two hams per QSO.
If an SSB round table uses 2400 Hz, but has six hams in it, the Hz-per-ham is only 400...

And modesd like PSK31 use less than 100 Hz....
>

What "liberal mentality"?

Let's look at the record:

1983-1984: FCC testing is turned over to VECs, Q&A pools are published, sending test is waived: Reagan Administration.

1987 Technician/General written is split in two: Reagan Administration

1990-1991: Medical waivers for code tests (as a favor to a foreign King),
Technician loses its code test: Bush I administration

1998-2000: 3 license classes closed off to new issues; written exams reduced,

code test reduced to 5 wpm: Clinton Administration

2003: S25.5 code test requirement eliminated from treaty: Bush II administration

2005: FCC proposes complete elimination of code test: Bush II administration.

Then there's BPL - who supported that idea?

> We received our current > spectrum total at a time (WARC 1979) when we had less than half the > present number of hams.

Compare how many hams with General/Advanced/Extra licenses existed then and now...

All three WARC bands added only 250 kHz to our HF allocations.

> This movement of wanting to "fill up the bands > or we'll lose them" is nonsense.

The bigger question is: With over 300,000 US hams holding General, Advanced or Extra licenses, (all of which have lots of HF/MF privs), why aren't the bands busting at the seams 24/7??

Everyone who can meet the license requirements should get the license. That's all there is to it.

> As Michael Savage says, "Liberalism is a mental disorder."

Ah! The perfect width for CW. Could be a renaissance for the mode.

I'll never understand the liberal mentality wanting set asides of public domain for few priveleged people to have a little fun. Kind of reminds me of the Arctic Wildlife Refuge where only F&W scientists are ever likely to set foot. Kind of reminds me of the falsified bobcat

The RAE was never an exam. It's not reconsider by any employer as a qualification. The Morse test merely showed a dedication to the hobby. A better test enabling access to HF would be an exam testing the ability of the individual to rectify emc issues etc.

Possibly. It could also reduce the inter-ham bickering to about half of what it is now, which would make the service much more appealing to potential -new- hams, myself included.

No I don't as a point of Fact, nor does he have one

If he had had a lawyer he would not have posted that one asking to contnue making the posts he claims to find offensive that sort of slip up is why a lawyer tells a cleient not to have Seven major motion pictures from Paramount Studios. Plus two documentaries concerning Star Trek fandom.

Five TV series (1966 to 2004) each lasting longer than two seasons:

[the original series]
"The Next Generation"
"Deep Space 9"
"Voyager"
"Enterprise"

Hundreds of printed-matter publications ranging from "manuals" to novels covering all the series' characters in plots and settings based on the series' background but enlarging on the basic premises.

Thousands of licensed (to Paramount) Star Trek itmes sold in many places from department stores to science-fiction conventions.

Phrases such as "Beam me up, Scotty" have become part of our word culture as has the "transporter" and "phaser." ["set your phaser to 'stun' (or 'kill')" to solve a problem]

Paramount Studies (and the Gene Roddenberry estate) have made millions of dollars in profit on the 38-year "history" of Star Trek. It is Big Business and remains profitable.

>> ah now you choose to insult Treekies
>
>WTF is a "Treekies"?

It is more correct to call them "Trekkers," avid trekkers having about the same need for exclusivity and belonging as all the radio amateurs who think that amateur radio is "so much MORE" than a hobby.

>Give us a hint on how many letters we need to change your >insult into English.

As I remarked before, it takes only ONE letter change to turn "Worf" into "wolf." Or vice-versa.

Now, Herr Worf, I suggest you have a glass of "a drink fit for warriors" (as Worf has remarked more than once)...
prune juice.

That's what I've been saying in here for years... :-(

Tell-tale signs of that psychosis showed up years ago after I explained the "Big Lie" technique of propaganda used by others, giving the historical reference of NAZI Germany and their successful use of that technique. As part of Dudly's "mirror syndrome," he ignored that and started to call my postings as "Goebbels-esque" just for disagreeing with Dud. :-) [reference being the NAZI propaganda minister in the 30s and early 40s Germany for all the young sprouts in here]

Suddenly Dud was "outraged" by any references to Nazism even though he was born a decade after the NAZIs were defeated, had never had any relative in a concentration camp, nor had he been a victim of any NAZI atrocity. Yet Dud ACTED just like the SA did in the very best "Krystalnacht" manner in here...and then in the SS manner (after the SA "brown shirts" had been tossed).

It's all a part of the mirror syndrome. The sufferer realizes what he is doing but can only see all the OTHERS as behaving as he does. He sees a reflection only of himself as the LIAR but tries to call everyone else a LIAR. Extreme rationalisation founded on basic survival needs. Calling everyone else what Dud shows himself to be is a classic mirror syndrome. Sick.

>Gee, Jim, how many times and how many different ways can you say that?

Brian, it's all Jimmie has left in his verbal arsenal. :-)

He still confuses "qualified" with AUTHORIZED insofar as "operating."

The FCC is very much AUTHORIZED by Congress to regulate ALL U.S.
civil radio. The FCC AUTHORIZES ability to use the EM spectrum by means of licensing.

However, neither Congress of the United States nor the Commission itself requires ANY staffer or commissioner to be licensed in any of the radio services it regulates. Ergo, under Jimmielogic, the FCC is "not qualified" to regulate U.S. amateur radio. :-)

That may be why, on 10 December, Jimmie wrote:

"The FCC doesn't license radio amateurs."

The whole point of Jimmie's comment on me was to discourage my posting. Jimmie's concept of discussion on "amateur radio policy" is a CLOSED one, limited ONLY to those who have already obtained an amateur radio license. This is rather wrong in a democraticprincipled society but it fits his insular exclusivity. It also fits Davie Heil's similar concept about amateur radio, so the two of them form a mutual-aid enclave in here. Since I don't agree with the "traditional" ('morse-coded') ideals of old U.S. amateur radio, Jimmie wants me OUT of the "discussion."

Under Jimmielogic there is NO hope of any unlicensed-in-amateur-radio person "discussing" anything, regardless of previous experience in any other radio service. [in Jimmieworld "amateur radio" is very much different than any other radio service, therefore ALL unlicensed-in-amateur-radio persons are "unqualified" to discuss anything] Unlicensed=in-amateur-radio persons may (in Jimmieconcepts) ask polite questions, but must never ever disagree with Jimmie (or his mutual opinion aid enclave) in so doing. At that point, Jimmieguru takes over and copies off reams of league-speak phrases, elevating amateur radio to planes of existance far beyond what it really is...just a hobby. QED.

indeed I suspect he may have told some lawyer a distorted tale of woe making nothing his fault . I have alwasy sasid he may be able to cost a me a retaier althought if he files this time from this threat, I will first try to have it dismissed working pro se, but if I have to spend the retainer I will counter sue him for his years of libel

Thank you.

I need to stop listening to obstructionists like Jim whose only purpose

They do try to run people off who happen to disagree with them. I even entertained thoughts of leaving the group at one time, but I won't let them run me off. I plan to turn off the lights when this group is done. Between Steve and Mark, that may be sooner than I thought.

Step back and take a good, hard look at the whole picture. Dud has been in this group for years doing the same things he's accusing of you, and he uses sock-puppets to boot. He has lied about many facets of his military 'career', he has lied about his status as an EMT, and has openly admitted to behavior that is marginally legal. He has no credibility in or out of the newsgroup. Not only that, but there have been many, many people who have prodded him on Usenet and he hasn't sued any of them yet. In case you haven't noticed, Dudly is all talk.

So like I said before, rest assured he doesn't have an attorney and he's not taking any sort of legal action. On the microbial chance that he has gone totally insane, enjoin me as a defendant and I'll crash his party. OK?

Looks like I missed a good one, Jim

I got my novice in 1962. I remember taking the test from Russ Deane, W2ZS. There was a note which stated "no extranious paper". I asked Russ if that meant no scratch paper. He said it stated no extranious paper. So, as I recall there were a couple of ohm's law problems. Simple, such as "how much current will flow through a 20 K Ohm resistor if 350 volts are applied to it?". I did the one or two problems in my head. No genius here, simply honest. Perhaps to a fault, but I followed the instructions to the letter. It might have been easier to ask him to take the instructions upstairs to his wife to read and get her interpretation. She was an attourney. Still, it made the test more interesting.

I obtained my general in 1964 and my extra, 1st phone, and 2nd telegraph in 1966.

I dropped all my licenses around 1982.

I decided to get my tickets (at least the ones I cared about) back in 1993 and simply tested out. My GROL and my extra. No studying nor any code practice. I did pass 20 words per minute after a few decades away from cw (last used in 1969). I must admit to having checked off some boxes randomly on the resonant frequency stuff. I knew I had plenty of correct answers and could afford to miss them. I didn't feel like extracting square roots by hand (I can, but it is tedious) and someone kindly offered me a calculator that rather resembled my remote for my entertainment center. Anything with that many buttons with no numbers I have a deep loathing for LOL. I believe I could write a simple BASIC program to do anything the calculator could in less time than it would take me to find the right buttons on the daggum thing. I declined the offer and simply checked some answers off (mostly wrong, I'm sure). I believe that was on the advanced test and I watched from a distance and only missed four questions.

The key here is if someone actually learns something, they will, in all probability, retain it. Some band edges may change and bands be added or removed from, but the basics are still the same. Of course, I did miss the question on 40 meters. Why did I think it went to 7.5 MHz? Either a brain cramp or early stage Alzheimer's

I am neutral on Morse code. If you don't really want to do it, just pass the 5 word per minute exam and be done - or wait until it is dropped. After a few years, you will forget it. I know that I can no longer copy American Land-Line Morse. I had memorized the different characters and was limited to about 16 words per minute on my best day - and depended upon extra time on the stuff I had to do a mental look-up be provided by the simple stuff that was the same.

Today, too many folks have no idea of even how to repair a broken audio cable. If one actually learned and applied it a bit, even a different problem would likely be solved.

Tomorrow, I've got to repair an old Hammond organ. No problem; I've fixed solid state and tube stuff. They all have sections with gazintas and goesottas. This is basic very easy tech stuff.

What is funny is to hear some of the arguements. They really take on a religious fervor at times LOL.

That's true, Bill.

But from FCC actions and reactions over the past 20 years plus, it's pretty clear that FCC is acting in accordance with those ideas.

> moment there are 3 licenses being issued, but even that

Of course! But at the same time, FCC isn't likely to change their mind in the near future on those issues unless somebody comes up with a really killer argument for the change.

> > How does any proposed system handle all these requirements?

And that has to be done in a way that will convince FCC.

Particularly, to convince FCC to overrule decisions it made just recently.

an entry-level license at all. FCC simply sees the Technician as the entry-level license for US ham radio, and also sees no reason to change that - even though several proposals have tried to change FCC's mind.

What you're seeing is the classic "Law of Unintended Consequences".
If FCC does what they propose, eliminating the code test will also eliminate any way for Technicians to get any HF privileges except by upgrade to General.

> > How do we convince FCC to accept the changes?

I'm sure that almost all the proposals and commenters thought they were making "clear and rational arguments". But FCC said no to all of them involving more privs for Techs, new license classes, automatic upgrades, and much more.
>

No, that's not how it happened, IIRC.

FCC first proposed a nocodetest ham license for the USA in 1975, as part of their "two-ladder" restructuring. (If you think
"incentive licensing" made things complex and took away privs from existing hams, you should see what FCC proposed in 1975!)

That 1975 proposal was so uniformly opposed by hams, ARRL, and other groups that it went nowhere. About the only part of it that was enacted was the renewal of Conditionals as General, and the Novice becoming full renewable like other licenses.

Then in 1983 FCC tried again to get a nocodetest ham license. And again ARRL and others opposed it so strongly that the idea went nowhere.

Finally in 1990, FCC tried again, and let it be known that this time they wouldn't take no for an answer. This was when 220 was under attack from land mobile, and ARRL decided to propose a new license class that would be a sort of "VHF/UHF Novice". No code test, simple written test, and the centerpiece of the privs would be 220 MHz privileges. The idea was that new hams would fill up 220 so much that it couldn't be reassigned. FCC saw through that idea, plus didn't want another license class, so they just dropped the code test for the Technician.

> FCC also
> left 13wpm and 20wpm as requirements for many years

Perhaps. Yet anyone who could come up with a doctor's note could get a medical waiver. Such notes were never hard to get.

> In spite of the lack of any consensus on > code the FCC did, in fact, end 13/20wpm test elements

> conclusions at that time.

Yep. FCC also reduced the written tests at the same time and closed off three license classes to new issues.

End result is less admin work for FCC. No more medical waivers, only three written elements instead of five, and eventual elimination of some rules.

> Bottom line, every statement or opinion offered by the FCC
> in any NPRM and/or R&O is not cast in stone and can Agreed - but at the same time, getting them to do so is an uphill battle. Particularly when such an change will result in more work for FCC.

> So Jim, with that in mind, what is your specific proposal?

I've given it here several times. Perhaps I'll dig it out and post it again.

My point is not that change is impossible, but that FCC isn't likely to adopt changes that violate the above principles.

For example, more than one proposal wanted free upgrades. FCC said no to all of them, and gave reasons why. (See footnote 142...)

I don't know about most folks, but I have never used a study guide. I enjoyed reading and think I had a late 50s ARRL Handbook when I took the Novice exam in 1962. Morse code held me up until 1964 for the General. I was not going to get trapped into a tech ticket back then.

It's around. You'll likely have to wade through countless Mark Morgan

You and Len are asked a number of things which you've apparently decided the answer.

It isn't my euphemism for anything. Maybe it is Mark's. He used the term "Q".

GLENDALE, WV: The FCC sent a Warning Notice November 9, 1999, to General
licensee Roger L. Wiseman, KC8JBO, citing evidence that the licensee had been "deliberately and maliciously interfering with the radio operations of other licensed amateurs" on 20 meters. "This interference has occurred at various times in the last several months and includes broadcasting music and other unidentified transmissions," said a letter from FCC Special Counsel for Amateur Radio Enforcement Riley Hollingsworth. Hollingsworth warned that continued operation of the type described could result in a fine or license revocation proceeding, and

Good story. My testing all predated pocket calculators...

Jim Grundy, K3NYT, gave me the Novice. He wouldn't even look at the exam papers to tell me if he thought I passed - just had to wait for the envelope from FCC. It was one of those "thick envelope/thin envelope" things, where a thin envelope was good because all it had inside was the license, while a thick envelope contained the failure letter and
the
forms to do the process all over again.

When I went for the General early the next summer, the FCC examiner couldn't read my copy
well enough to find the required 65 characters. (Catholic school Palmer Method longhand is pretty poor for copying Morse). So I went home and taught myself rapid block printing a la Signal Corps. Went back at the end of the summer and knocked off the 13 per no sweat. Since I'd passed the Tech/General written, I had the General - but the examiner said, "why not try the Advanced while you're here?"

14 year olds back then did not say no to The Man, so I tried (even though I'd not studied for Advanced at all) and passed easily.

I'm sure there are things I once knew well that I've forgotten - but I can't remember what they are....

Of course - but that would require a major culture change.
Practical/technical skills are not valued much in American society anymore, except in very specific areas.

It's not so much about technology as about culture. The "modern" response
is that the Hammond should just be replaced with something new.

Of course! The funniest part is how much I get attacked for presenting

First off I NEVER sent him any "Threatening" letters. The Letters he recieved were from some one using the blog email system, He (STEBIE) did post a "email" on here that was suppose to been sent by me. The IP Address that was in the message wasn't my IP Address, it had been added to the message.

RIGHT, that's a bunch of crap, I have no control on who posts on my blog, the only power I really really have is to make everyone who wants to post to register, but that will not stop the abuse, because all they have to do is go to a blog that doesn't require registering, which is what they are doing.

Oh i have indeed I was merely giving the credit that he might disort focusing in close he has moments where he looks sane, he might have had he is almost all talk But I am cautious, Indeed for once I would like him to sue me it would get him to court on his dime

But indeed He has done everything I have and he has given me premssion

What is clear is that in '98 the FCC wanted to modernize the ARS. And it was pretty clear that they wanted the ARRL to lead in that modernization. And it was pretty clear that the ARRL had no plan (gosh, no concensus). When the ARRL saw Carl, Bill, and NCI et al, heading up the steps of the FCC building, the ARRL finally had the courage to develop a plan. The FCC wasn't particularly impressed with the ARRL plan.

Almost 8 years later we're still dealing with a lack of leadership in the amateur community, even after several NPRMs.

Perhaps NCI needs to ramp up and become an advocate for a broader array of issues than just the Morse Code Test issue.

I propose that new license applications be available in two classes, namely "Class B" and "Class A".

The "Class B" learners permit would have an entry-level test (basic regulations, safety, operating procedures, basic DC and AC electronics). This class would have full frequency and mode privileges, power limited to 50W output. The permit would be issued for a period of 10 years, and be non-renewable.

The "Class A" license test would be of a difficulty level similar to the current Extra class test, and would have full privileges at power levels up to 1500W, equivalent to current Extra Class license holders. This license would be issued "for life" without requirement for renewal.

Current licenses could be renewed indefinitely, and would retain their current operating privileges.

Current Novice, Technician, General, and Advanced class
licensees could upgrade to "Class A" at any time.

It merely grants bragging rights, and the option of claiming that ham X is more of a ham than ham Y. It also leads to the belief that "Since I had to march uphill both ways through the snow and drought, with cardboard in the sole of my shoes, you must do it too."

Not in Jimmieworld. ONLY those who already possess official, valid amateur radio licenses are - in Jimmieworld - "qualified" to discuss any amateur radio regulations. That way, there is little conflict due to so many who were required to operate under the older regulations...which Jimmie passed.

Doesn't matter if the "special counsel" to the Commission got it or not. Any permanent staffer at the Commission can see that Jimmie got it WRONG in public.

Well, I must admit that there is MUCH posting in this group that isn't needed (too much cross-posting), full of anony-mousies that like to cuss and say nasty words, and the Dudly who refuses to admit he was defeated years ago.

>The Holy Grail is just a hobby?

NOT the Holy Grail of the Judeo-Christian world, the holy grail of the Church of Saint Hiram. What Jimmie learned in Seminary was the holy grail of the Church of St. Hiram.

Amateur radio really IS just a hobby, not a profession, not a "national service" in any way, shape, or form.

There should be NOTHING negative about having a HOBBY. There are so many different hobbies in this large land, as diverse as there are different people. What gets bad is when certain hobbyists demand that THEIR ideas about that hobby MUST apply to everyone else...or else...

One problem with amateur radio is that, to exist, it must radiate RF. That requires the FCC to regulate it. The FCC regulates it by establishing license test regulations. The amateur radio hobbyists can now point to their "official" licenses and make a big fuss of how spay-shull they are, "taking tests" to prove how "qualified" they are, and strutting around like they are a "national service" of something. Wannabe professionals, stuck with the classification of "amateurs" (which no doubt rankles the self-important types in the hobby).

> Get ready for some off-topic british humor.

Monty Python strikes again? :-)

"Monty Python and the Holy Grail" was a funny-once comedy movie. Worth the price of a DVD rental, but not a cinema ticket, if you ask me. Anglophiles seem to lap that stuff up. Well, it is better than Pauly Shore on a good night, but not much more... :-)

[Pauly Shore is the son of Mitzi Shore who owns the Comedy Store nightclub here in Los Angeles...which doesn't make him any good at comedy but he does have "connections"]

The only non-sense is in the objections of all those who use their present "extra" license class title to show how "good" they are and "better than average."

While a certain party in here will mumble on about class
"A" and "B" have been done before (as class designations)
the good thing about the alphabetic arbitrary "names" is that none of those carry any emotional baggage which now exists with the present six-class naming scheme (yes, Jimmie, I know that the FCC is only issuing "new" licesnes in three classes, but the old ones still exist in the FCC databases).

VEs would have it easier with so few test-proctorings and that might mean long times between VE testing sessions, somewhat delaying entry of newcomers (to either A or B classes).

Once you take "news" and add "opinion", it becomes editorial and is no longer within the realm of an "information bulletin".

You're an idiot, Todd, and unfortunately for the rest of us it's illegal to shoot idiots just on principle. Otherwise this episode would be over already.

But it's illegal even for idiots to break the law, and sooner or later the FCC will come knocking on your door.

Good luck trying to pass your rationalizations off on them.
They've logged a lot of time getting blockheads like you off the air,
and on occassion, into jail...where you belong.

Nothing. It was a joke. But they are so much alike and share similar persuations, that it's not beyond the realm of the possible these days.

No, no, NO!

It was YOU being YOU that got you thrown off, Todd!

And it's painfully apparent that you haven't learned a whole lot form the experience, either!

If you get kicked off again, it will be YOUR fault.

And it wasn't me, nor was it anyone I know.

What?

Did you mean "How did you know this?"

Easy. I can read.

You're right...I prefr my "affairs" woth women.

"Girlie men" don't qualify.

I am not "admitting" anything, Mark.

And as you said, it's "none of your affair".

If you're really THAT interested, Mark, Just back up and go over the last 6 weeks worth of RRAP drivvel.

Rights, Mark...Rights...

You can't whine about getting yours then demanding that others can't have theirs.

Same with Toiddie. He likes to throw "IT'S MY RIGHT" around as if saying so shields him from responsibility.

T'aint so.

Todd's the one with the learning deficit, Mark.

If you're going to jump into a thread and muck around, at least please have the attributes and "stories" straight.

Are you really that stupid, Mark, or is it a seasonal thing?

Nope.

Sure I can say it.

Because no one on MY friends list was responsible.

There's a considerable "back channel" flow of communications going on, sometimes moreso than others.

No one >>I<< know is responsible.

> Case 2 You do know which means you know the prep and are lying in

Nope.

It is as I said.

Deal with it.

Well, Todd...You've only posted one item on RRAP since May and already it's begun.

However, here's the benefit of the doubt: Here's a copy of the e-mail I got along with headers. I am e-mailing it to you also.

Now you can take it to your ISP and let THEM deal with it.

I didn't lie, Todd.

I forwarded those letters to Consolidated. I didn't generate them.

However those letters aside, there's one thing YOU seem to not grasp...And that is that even WITHOUT those e-mails, there was more than adequate justification to pull your service.

You were warned. You ignored it. You lost your service.

It really is THAT simple.

There are no "shows" on Amateur Radio.

"Shows" are broadcasting.

If you're promoting a "show" on an Amateur Radio allocation, you're breaking the law.

That's pretty close, Markie. There are quite a few RN's who were gald for the service.

No, facts do not confuse me.

Yes, your illiterate drivvel does.

I did not generate (author) the e mails in question. Even Todd acknowledges that.

But I allege he DID commit a crime, Markie.

He facilitated the promulgation of those letters by providing the resources by which they could be generated and he incited the behaviour that resulted in it.

Besides...Why write "TOS" rules if you're not going to expect people to abide by them or provide protection for others with them?

You didn't answer my question, Markie. It only requires a "yes" or "no"...Is it YOUR position that people who call 9-1-1 to report a crime in progress are un-Christian?

> > Are the viewers of "America's Most Wanted" un-Christian?

You again refuse to answer a yes/no question.

Is it your position that people who view "America's Most Wanted"
are un-Christian?

I'm not a "spelling NAZI", Markie.

I simply am aghast that a person can graduate high school in the United States with the absolutely horrific English skills you have.

And what is a "Hipocrocy"...?!?!

Markie, you REALLY owe it to yourself to be sure that you KNOW what you're talking about before you comment on it.

We are not discussing Internet content. We're discussing Todd illegal broadcasting on the 20 meter band.

> You simply believe YOU are apointed by someone (yourself? or is it the

I didn't say he's "guilty" of anything, Markie. It's for a judge or jury to decide. However Todd's starting to rack-up points towards a "K1MAN Look-Alike" award.

See what happens when you jump into the middle of an on-going rant without first taking the time to see who's ranting about what, Markie?

Todd's already admitted to illegal broadcasting on TV and FM frequencies, and has admitted to operating an aircraft contrary to Federal Aviation rules and regulations.

Now he's come to RRAP, obstensibly to get approval for or to advertise the presence of his "shows".

The problem is that NOone cares about his broadcasts. He's simply using them as a sham for his self-promoting diatribes. Nothing more.

Unfortunatley not far enough away vis-a-vis RRAP.

I am not "eMpowered" to do anything but observe and comment.

Your "writing" is a travesty. It's a violet rape of the English language, to say the least. Todd's a close second.

Only you would write a sentence which actually acknowledges and agrees with my assessment of your "moral character", Markie.

I still have no delusions about you, Markie, unless you include my hopes that you'll seek help for your personal issues and/or buy a "Hooked On Phonics" program.

Of course you wouldn't. You don't deal well with the truth.

Todd Daugherty is a radio scofflaw. He's a wanna-be junior broadcaster. He didn't get an FCC broadcast license because the FCC wasn't about to let a foul-mouthed, illiterate idiot have a license, especially when he couldn't get the simple act of getting the paperwork right.

Sheeeeeeeeeeesh.

Periods, Todd...Use periods.

And for the billionth time, Todd...

Those letters themselves wouldn't have mattered.

There was enough LEGITIMATE stuff to "can" you.

I reported it. Consolidated agreed.

And IF YOU HAD LISTENED TO ME in the first place, no one would have been able to take advantage of the blog like that.

> (UNSNIP)...that's OK I'm make sure no one in this town and surround area

Yeah..uh huh...Right...

Chances are that if people find out WHY you were canned, they'll be MORE likely to join Consolidated just becasue they know that Consolidated is concerned with keeping trash off the Internet, even if it is just one piece at a time.

> (UNSNIP)...that letter you post on here was

I understand it just fine.

What YOU continue to ignore is that those letters weren't the only reason you got canned.

No, you're not.

But then this is a PUBLIC forum and a certain amout of decorum is expected (or should be) "MF", "AH", "CS" and other such adjectives are NOT language you typically hear walking down the street or walking through Wal-Mart, and I don't think it's appropriate here.

Then when you DIRECTED it at me, well, that cinched it.

Seems to me the "moron" was the customer who thought that $36/month was a license to be obnoxious, mistruthful and idiotic with.

In this case the @@@hole WAS the customer.

So far, you've blamed...

me for being a crybaby...

Consolidated for actually enforcing their own regulations and threats...

Buzz Corey for, well, who knows why...

The ONLY person you've NOT blamed is the person responsible for your predicament...

YOU!

There a re no "shows" on Amateur Radio.

A "show" is a program prepared for broadcast for the general public.

If you'd "x" out the "bitches" and the "###hole", you would really impessed me...

One step at a time, though, I guess.

One last question, Todd...

Do you think you're any more likely to get your broadband service back by continuing to use profanity and call the people with their fingers on the service keys names in a public forum...?!?!

No, I don't.

Still not accepting responsibility for your own behaviour,
Todd...?!?!

You'll NEVER get past this until you realize that YOUR mouth and YOUR behaviour.

Consolidated saw exactly the same stuff you and I did.

They acted on it.

They told you to stay away.

You didn't do it.

YOU lost YOUR broadband....Not me...

No, Todd, people do NOT, as a matter of routine life, talk "like that".

Yes...they do it in porno's, some "action" movies, and rap music videos.

Educated, responsible adults do NOT talk like that in public.

> here's an Idea don't go to New

I've been to New York City. And Miami. And Los Angeles. And Dallas, Atlanta, Nashville, etc etc etc.

People don't carry on like that as a matter of "real life"
conversations in public.

Problem is that your scenario is wrong.

I am not a sadist.

But you ARE a liar, a cheat, a lawbreaker and deadbeat.

Let's get into a side by side debate over Consolidated's practices and see who carries the day, eh, Todd...?!?!

And YOU keep ignoring the fact that I DID those things, including trying to get you to stop the offensive language and do something to control your blog posters.

You refused.

Nothing I did was wrong, illegal or immoral.

That YOU don't LIKE it is another story.

Not in public. Not in schools, museums, theaters or other public venues.

And people who make it a point of being offensive get hauled away.

I don't live a sheltered life. (Coming from an almost-40 year old deadbeat sponging off of mom and dad, that was cute, Todd!)

I don't listen to rap music for that very reason.

No, it doesn't.

If you're producing a "show", it's neither an "information bulletin", nor legal within the FCC's parameters.

Sure I do. I just live in a more responsible, professional world where mature adults don't have to resort to sandlot profanity to try and "one-upmanship" someone.

Your callsign is becomming a laughing stock, Todd. People are looking out for you now. Too late to try and hide it now.

I didn't "snitch toad out" for his newsgroup activities other than his threats and profanities which I received via e-mail. Not all of the stupid letters I received were via his blog. The headers tell the tale and THAT'S what got him into trouble.

As for the suggestion that Todd was not responsible for the threatening letters, I look at it this way...Even if he didn't send some of them, he encouraged and incited others via his blog to act irresponsibly.

I asked him repeatedly to stop using my name and callsign on his blog, and he just repsonded with more threats and profanities.

Also, I am obviously NOT the only person who's been busting Todd's chops with his ISP.

He played with fire...He got burnt...Oh well...

Mona wrote:

> ...and the tale of the weak-bladdered duo is to be continued.

Your own anonymous status notwithstanding, this is not an unusual situation. Once every 6 months or so an anonymous "LennieFan" pops up, glad hands Lennie for a few days or couple weeks, then disappears as quickly as they arrived.

Lennie's only NON-anonymous fans have been very few. First on his list is Brian Burke, N0IMD. "Brain" is himself an archived chronic liar and has numerous character issues unresolved. He cowers behind

"bb" and won't sign his name or callsign to posts alledging "spam mitigation". Bunk.

"Brain" has a laundry list of unanswered, unresolved questions going back over 5 years, yet he tries to hide his inadequacies behind false and misleading spindances against me.

The fact is that he's not only been caught with his britches down more than a fifty cent hooker on payday, but they are dragging behind him, tattered and forever unrepairable and unserviceable. Did it to himself, though...He keeps running headlong into that brick wall then complains about the headache.

There's Vipul Shah, KB1HMW. Actually, Vipul started out as "anonymous", but with a bit of research I "outted" him. What can we say about Vipul? I am sure he's basically a nice guy, but he's one of those immigrants who seems to think the entirety of the United States is going to morph into something HE can understand, rather than him adapting to the enviroment he's in. He carries that through to Amateur Radio, and has suggested on several occassions that Amateur Radio would be much better off if "we" saw things his way instead.

His primary motive for being in Amateur Radio, apparently, is hitting on "preeti fems". Now I've been an Amateur for several decades now, and have, on occassion, met a female Amateur who turned heads smartly, but they are far and very few between, and usually the spouse of some 6'3" linebacker named "Rocky". Anyone who got an Amateur ticket to "meet babes" is going to be sorely disappointed! Lord know's I've looked!

And let's not forget how buddybuddy Lennie and Todd Daugherty, N9OGL were a couple weeks ago...Need I say anything more about Todd? Foul mouthed, functionally illiterate, and too stupid to cover his own tracks when leaving ugly e-mails. But it doesn't surprise me...Lennie likes to punctuate his rants with a burst of profanity from time to time, so I am sure he was right at home. However Todd holds the crown...Now if he can just find another ISP since his foul, irresponsible mouth got him booted from the "local" service in Taylorville, IL.

Now we suddenly have "John". Allegedly a middle aged Amateur of unknown years experience, unknown level of licensure, unknown organizational affiliations, memberships, etc..."John" may very well be a "real" person (read that as "not a figment of Lennie's imagination") but I doubt it. It would not be above Lennie (or beyond him) to create yet another anonymous "buddy" to help him get through a rough time in the NG. It's happened before. I may be wrong, but that duck sure is quacking pretty loudly.

Todd sent me a couple of challenges...thought you might get a laugh from them:

Item First:

QUOTE

n9ogl has sent you a link to a weblog:

If you want I will let you write guest colum of other opinion.
Up to the chalenge, retard?

Todd

UNQUOTE

The "chalenge", Todd, is getting through your "posts" and
"letters" without getting a headache from deciphering your semi-literate grammar.

There is no way on God's Green Earth that I would "guest write" a column on a blog of yours, thereby appearing to lend even the most indirect or unintentional "legitimacy" to your "blog".

Item Second:

QUOTE

K9OGL has sent you a link to a weblog:

Todd

UNQUOTE

Who is "K9OGL", Todd? Can't even get your own call right?

And Todd...

If you're going to call someone else a "retard", you really ought to not make the claim in a sentence that makes it appear as though the claim was MADE by a "retard"...(Although in this case we would be correct...)

And I repeat my previous assertion...There is no way on God's Green Earth that I would "guest write" on your blog, thereby lending, however unintentional, some "legitimacy" to your blog.

Then why do you insist on bringing it here?

And don't you realize that since YOU are determining the content,
NOT the people listening, YOU are going to make a LOT of enemies?

You keep calling all the people who are potential listeners to your broadcasts "morons"...How do you intend to develop any listener base by insulting everyone you come into contact with.

Pay attention, Todd...

No one in this forum, and there are quite a few disparate ideologies here, likes your idea or supports you. When this many people who can't agree on anything else DO agree on ONE thing, you can bet your bottom dollar that it's true. And we all agree you're an idiot.

We don't care about your half-baked "theories". They are as dumb as they come. They're unsafe, to boot.

Your opinions on FCC practice and policy are based upon your emotional, knee jerk reactions based on YOUR failures to get a broadcast license which was, in and of itself, due to YOUR unworthiness for said licensure.

You're a loser all the way around, and we (yes...the "royal "we") don't give a hoot about you or your opinions

It's not about "suppressing (your) free speech".."Speech" all you want to...we just don't want to HEAR it, Todd. So if you keep running into brick walls everytime you open your mouth, don't say you weren't told.

Yep. That's exactly what I wrote.

And it was in the same post wherein I lamented the loss of my daughter and her untimely death. And everything I said in it is true.

E V E R Y DAY of the week there are articles about people who "died suddenly", people killed in automobile accidents, and innocents sitting in their own living rooms kiled by a stray bullet.

Not one word of it untrue.

Maybe next you'll be telling us about the black helicopters taking pictures of your house, Todd?

Or are you just taking lessons from Brian "Habitual Liar" Burke? He likes to take bits and pieces of other peoples posts and try to make threatening sounding posts too.

It doesn't work for him either...It only makes him look all the more foolhearty...Not that you need much help in THAT department, Todd.

For ONCE you were right, Markie, but only because I didn't consider it a big enough deal to map out on MAPQUEST. It's a total of 89 miles DRIVING.

However that STILL puts Chassell "near" Marquette...Unless you're crawling on your hands and knees, a position I am sure you are comfrotable in.

I take a "stand corrected" on the thirty miles, however STILL assert that even 90 miles is "near" when compared to other cities within Michigan.

You posted THIS response under a forged screen name defiling the

To misrepresent your identity is, in and of itself, deceitful.
Ergo you clearly demonstrated that you are NOT truthful.

It doesn't make them technically proficient to do Morse at 12wpm but it does mean they have actually got the basic skills to communicate in a different language, it used to make them technically proficient holding the Licence because it included more in depth knowledge and understanding of aspects of their hobby whereas now, the dropping on Morse and the simplified tick box answers makes the licence a much easier and less respected qualification.

Of course the above is true, and you are a true Amateur and you admit and acknowledge that you aren't gods gift and there are others out there with a lower licence that surpass you in technical knowledge in certain fields rather than the nut jobs in here who just like to wind people up and belittle them calling them brain dead and lazy arsed because they think they are superior in "every" way.

Peter, you have no argument with me over this. I also have no real interest in Morse either(at the moment) as Amateur radio is about far more than Morse. I don't like the attitude of a few in here with their Bigotry towards newcomers and class B either but.... I can see both sides and the old school who studied hard and were proud to get their Top Level licences feel that their efforts have been nullified as the licence has dropped the Morse requirement and is now a lower and easier thing to obtain. That said why spit Bile and hatred towards others.... it's supposed to be a Gentlemen's pursuit.

I also know many G8s who

No argument with you at all there....

Absolutely my point Pete if you scroll through some of the messages I've posted over many months (not just in here) you would see me making the same point many times. I would rather talk on the radio rather than dot dah at people, "if all else fails you can get through" is the argument many put forward. So what? Its only a technical hobby and hardly likely to be used by the majority of Hams in an emergency. Most folk now have mobile phones and the chances of more than one cell being knocked out is, in reality, an unlikely event as the same power failures would take out the repeaters too. I certainly wouldn't use the radio to call for help if I had a mobile phone with me and I'm 99.9% certain I would more likely have my phone at my side than a radio of any description so why worry about getting through. Also if it was so easy to make contact where's the sense of accomplishment? That's why I like 11m. It's hard to make a contact but when you do it's a great feeling.

I take people as I find them Pete and if they are M3, Intermediate or Advanced as long as they spoke to me as I would speak to them, I can't genuinely see a problem. Its just a few nutjobs in here that have issues, not me.

Regards and a happy new year,
Graham

Still waiting for a point.

Or are you just fond of recycling old posts?

You're gay. Mark's gay. You're both from the same part of the country.

You're a bit more accurate with your written word, however the profanites and quickness to lose your temper offset that.

And STILL no point...Other that recycling my assertions as to your misuse and abuse of your Amateur Radio license.

So...I could go on and on through these quotes you made, Toiddie, and keep coming up with the same result...That you have no point to make other than hoping that someone might get lost in all the headers you quoted and forget that the bottom line is that YOU got in trouble for YOUR actions.

Just like Markie's doing now.

Consolidated Communications are a bunch of assholes to believe this lying mother fucker who's name is Steve Robeson K4YZ. The asshole could get it that they were sent through blogger.com, which are owned by these fucking assholes (GOOGLES!) and I had no control over those people who post, and what REALLY pisses me off is the fuckers at CONSOLIDATED believed that wormly little bastard (K4YZ). Hell, the son of bitch admitted in one of those post that the messages were fake

QUOTE

"As much as it pains me to do so, I may owe Todd an apology for
the others. It now appears that someone tried to send a "message" to Todd threatening him as "me".

Guess we just need to find out who"

UNQUOTE

But, no the little wormy fucker lies first claiming he did send those letters to consolidated and then later LIES that he didn't send the letters. And FYI a ISP is nothing more then a conduit, and had no really power to control what the person posts on the Internet. The US Federal courts has ruled that a message on the internet has just as much first amendment right protection as regular normal Print. As for my Blog, I have no control on what a person post, as a matter of fact some message that were sent later were sent not from my blog but from other blogs, and if you want I'll search googles and bring them up as well. But a good example was an email I recieved from VK3HAG, the message wasn't sent by him but from some one going through one of BLOGGER.COM blog site, and it wasn't my blog. But no Steve "I'm the moderator of rec.radio.amateur.policy" Robberson believes that I can tell the people, who I don't know to stop what they are doing. Or tell those other blog site owners how they should run their sites. Bottom line steve should get the "I'M AN ASSHOLE AWARD" along with those stupid fucks at Consolidated Communication" and any wormy little fuckers on here that supports that son of a bitch should also get that award as well.

Douchebags!!!

I've reread it and see no mistake. "Brain" and "stvie" are so unalike that mispelling one won't result in the other. Do you have some other tactic to try?

If it has nothing to do with amateur radio or RRAP, why have you posted not till after you apologize for calling me a rapist, a pedophile, a drunk, thereatening to kill me promise to stop bring things up that don't belong here

apolgize for saying tTodd father has AIDS, hta I have aid (or anyone esle you have said has aids or any std)

stop bashing the disable

stop lying about being to Know someone you have met (and may the gods grants Never will meet) is drunk physicaly or mental ill and promise to stop altering text forgeing attribution gee I can't add up it all

and then folow up by stoping your doing of the above

But why apologize to you

becuase in part it would too late you have already filed suit remember, if I believeyou on that point there would be no reason to apologize nothing has been done to you that you have not done to me

ntohing has been that you don't claim you have the power to do freely

that means you conesnt to it being doen to you

you object to the number of post and new threads but you claimYOU have the right to start as many as you like that means you accept that I have the right, legaly

you claim you may "defile the dead" to make a joke and as attack thread against BB therfore you lack legal standing to object to being so treated yourself

indeed you have given me leave to use your daughters name as a email address

3223. What's it all about? - FAQ

In case there are those who got a CB-type rig such as the 817 in their stockings and were misled by those-who-ought-to-have-known-better into thinking that they were Radio Hams, the weekly FAQ is posted a couple of days early to enable the parents to take the CB gear back to the shop before the shops close for another Bank Holiday.....

Please remember that this FAQ is a positive exhortation to you to exert yourselves to join our fraternity! (If you find otherwise, then perhaps you are already classing yourself in the mediocre groups of those who are criticised in the FAQ and from whom we _MUST_ dissociate? If so - it's never too late for a re-taxonomisation on your part - there's nothing elitist about us, and we welcome all those who are prepared to put themselves out in order to join our ranks!)

-----ooooo-----

What is Ham Radio?

Ham Radio is a technical pursuit for those who are interested in the science of radio wave propagation and who are also interested in the way that their radios function. It has a long-standing tradition of providing a source of engineers who are born naturals.

Ham Radio awakens in its aficionados a whole-life fascination with all things technical and gives an all-abiding curiosity to improve one's scientific knowledge. It's a great swimming pool, please dive in!

This excitement causes a wish to share the experience with ones fellow man, and shows itself in the gentlemanly traditions of Ham Radio.

Radio Hams are in a unique privileged position in that they can construct and operate their own equipment! No-one else has this privilege. Users, such as broadcasters, the po lice and armed farces, CBers and mobile phone users have to purchase ready-made gear. Manufacturers are not licensed to operate their gear. Radio Hams are qualified to design, build and then operate their own pieces of equipment. They do this with gusto, and also repair and modify their own equipment. This is a privilege well worth the effort to gain, and one to be jealously guarded.

The excitement that drives a Radio Ham starts with relatively simple technologies at first, perhaps making his own Wimshurst machine and primary cells. Small pieces of test equipment follow, possibly multimeters and signal generators. Then comes receivers and transmitters. It is with the latter that communication with like-minded technically motivated people takes off. The scope for technical development grows with the years and now encompasses DSP and DDS. There is also a great deal of excitement in the areas of computer programming to be learnt and applied.

The technical excitement motivates Radio Hams to compete with each other to determine who has designed and manufactured the best-quality station. This competitiveness is found in DXing, competitions and fox-hunts.

-----OOOOO----

However, beware! A Ham Radio licence is such a desirable thing to have that there are large numbers of people who wish to be thought of as Radio Hams when, in fact, they are nothing of the kind! Usually such people are a variation of the CB Radio hobbyist; they buy their radios off the shelf and send them back to be repaired; they are not interested in technical discussion and sneer at those who are; they have no idea how their radios work inside and have no wish to find out;
they are free with rather silly personal insults;
they have not satisfied any technical qualification and their licences prevent the use of self-designed-and-built equipment.

These CB types engage in the competitive activities with their Cheque-Book-purchased off-the-shelf radios
in a forlorn effort to prove that they are Radio Hams.

No _REAL_ Radio Hams are deceived by such people!

-----ooooo-----

One such CB type is the so-called "Not-Ham". Otherwise known as the CBer-Masquerading-As-A-Radio-Ham, this type had their background in the hobby that is CB Radio and not in the technical pursuits that lead up to a coveted Ham licence.
Easily recognised by their boasts of the criminal activity of 11 metre SSB operation, one wonders why they don't go back to the CB Bands if such bands are dearer in their hearts than are the Ham Bands? No _REAL Radio Hams associate with those who made an illegal installation of transmitting equipment before being in possession of an appropriate licence.

-----ooooo-----

One infallible way to disambiguate the CB Radio Hobbyist from the _REAL_ Radio Ham is to solicit their view of the difference between CB Radio and Ham Radio. A Radio Ham will perceive Ham Radio to be a technical pursuit and will perceive CB Radio to be a social communications facility no different in essence to a land-line telephone or a GSM mobile in the hands of a 6-year-old. Thus a Radio Ham could also hold a CB licence safe in the knowledge that such a licence says no more about him than having a land-line telephone, whilst continuing to regard Ham Radio as a separate technical pursuit.

A CB Radio hobbyist, on the other hand, sees no difference between a Ham Radio licence and a CB Radio licence. To him, they are sisters-under-the-skin. Wrongly, the CB Radio Hobbyist then tries to classify himself as the equal of the Radio Ham when, in fact, he is nothing of the kind. A sure sign of a CB Radio hobbyist is if he holds, or has ever held, a licence issued under the gangrenous degeneration that is the M3/CB Fools' Licence scheme.

-----ooooo-----

One group of people who claim to be of the standard of Radio Hams but who are in reality nothing more than an apology for the failure of a CBer are those class B licensees who falsely proclaimed that they were against the use of a Morse Test to control access to the HF bands, until, that is, a test was introduced at their intellectual level, the intellectual level of 6-year-olds.

6 year-olds simply lack the mathematical tool kit to enable them to handle even the simplest algebraic manipulation for Ohm's Law and thus, the disgraceful Class Ber's in the aforementioned category are not Radio Hams by any stretch of the imagination!

Remember - A sure sign of a CB Radio hobbyist is if he holds,
or has ever held, a licence issued under the gangrenous
degeneration that is the M3/CB Fools' Licence scheme!

You'll probably see that raised to 100-150 W on HF because there are so many ~100 W rigs in existence.

But "re-takeable" - if someone took the Class B test again, they'd get another 10 years as Class B - right?

Some questions, Hans (minor details, really):

1) What test would be required for upgrade to Class A for current licenses?
Would the testing be the same for all current license classes - IOW, would a current Novice face the same test to get Class A as a current Advanced?

2) Would there be any experience requirement for Class B hams that wanted to upgrade to Class A? IOW, could an unlicensed person go for Class A "right out of the box"?

3) If the licenses are issued "for life", how would FCC know when an amateur expired unless next-of-kin sent official notification? (Yes, having nonexpiring licenses means the apparent number of hams would cause apparent growth, but OTOH it would also make the numbers less and less a reflection of reality)

4) What would happen to the vanity callsign program under your plan? Obviously a Class A could get a callsign from any block, but what would be available to Class B?

One interesting side-effect of your plan is that a brand-new Class B will be allowed on frequencies that an old-timer Advanced (or any other non-Extra) is not allowed on. Imagine the fracas that would cause!

bwaahaahaa!

Of course, the counterargument is that "it's an incentive for existing hams to upgrade to Class A!"

after all when I crossfire at him fast his shit filled posts don't draw as much attention from the sharks anny mouse posters

It is to be noted that the OP also said, elsewhere, that "I wouldn't recommend anyone whose background is in transistorised QRP to tackle the neutralising of a compact PA stage with 600 VDC on the anodes after replacing the antenna coupling capacitor ".

So, take warning that the so-called FAQ is not to be taken literally;
there are safety criteria that limit its generality. The author has yet to publish these.

It is, for example quite unclear what the difference between a compact PA with 600VDC on the anodes, and a non-compact PA that is otherwise the same.

In that context, it is best ignored.

The 50W number was chosen because it's a "safe" level according to OET thinking.

If there were a 50W permit, manufacturers would quickly market a 50W rigs, just as they manufacture 10W versions of many popular rigs for the JA market.

Not in my proposal.

Pass the Class A test.

I originally proposed a "time in grade" requirement, but in retrospect I can't find a logical regulatory reason to defend the idea.

Since no benefits accrue to an "expired" ham, the FCC has no interest in their passing.

Each new licensee would get a new call in sequential order. Vanity calls would be available to any licensee without regard to "blocks".

Nope. You go right on ahead and do it.

I sarcastically encourage you to continue your bizzarre behaviour

I, on the otherhand, choose to continue to point out that you ARE

It may appear so to you, but I don't believe such is the case in an absolute sense. We'll just have to disagree on that.
I believe the ARRL also would disagree with you (IMHO).

As proposed by the ARRL, the Learner's license would (IMHO) involve a less intense syllabus of material and access to some HF.
. IF that is the case,
and ARRL accepts FCC mindset to leave Tech
as entry level, then what gets changed to make the Tech an entry level per ARRL mindset.
...and, can I presume that you would be in opposition to the Tech being changed in that or any other way?

Of course they did.

Yet nothing in the FCC's rejection even comes close to stating their decision is absolute/final and irrevocable based on the princioples that you ascribe to the FCC.

But in the overall perspective waivers were used only by a relatively small percentage of new hams. In the few VE sessions I assisted in I don't recall ever seeing one being used. Was the waiver process abused by some?
Probably, but it wasn't a wide practice at all.

I presume you mean the FCC reduced the number of written tests as opposed to the overall difficulty of the test material since the syllabus for the now three remaining test elements did not change.

(SNIP)

That eventual elimination, unless changes are made by the FCC, could well be upwards of 50+ years assuming there are some Advanced hams who are in their 20s.

On the issue of a learners license I see no additional work for FCC if there are only one or two other licenses as some (e.g. Hans) have proposed.

Does it reflect any of the options I listed above?

In your opinion that is. In fact, several of the principals you listed are only your interpretation based on FCC decisions as opposed to the FCC ever articulating or stating them as fact.

> For example, more than one proposal wanted free upgrades.
> FCC said no to all of them, and gave reasons why. (See

Neither of us may be around to collect on this bet, but I'll bet you a dinner anywhere that sometime down the road
the FCC will "simplify" the rules and regs by renewing Advanced as either Extra or General when the number of Advanced drops to a small percentage of all amateurs. I also believe that IF a learner's license does come to pass, the FCC will make all current Novice licenses renewable to that new license name AND will make the rules for the existing Novice the same as whatever rules and privileges are given to the new learner's class.

Cheers,

After you. Unconditional and with a solemn pledge that you'll never again defile a child in the manner you are currently doing.

There's no "offer" here...Just more of the same rhetoric.

If you'd exercise even 1/4th of your alleged 248 IQ, you could have used a dictionary to spell it correctly...even pecking one letter at a time to get it right.

Mark, all of those posts are symptomatic of a very weak and sick mind. If you were the alleged "better man" that you suggested you are in another thread, you would have never started abusing her in the first place.

No one, least of all me, is standing over your shoulder forcing you to do it. You started this and perpetuate this all on your own.

Indeed you'd impress the bejeebers out of a lot of folks (none-the-least-of-all me) if you stopped it just because it's the right thing to do.

But I compute the odds of that happening to be somewhat less likely than my chances with the Powerball or MegaMillions lotteries.

I missed your original post, and the followup I saw edited out the question, so I don't know from which class of license your #31 came from. But I thought it would be interesting to post #31 from each class:

Novice #31: Draw the schematic diagram of a circuit having the following components: a) Battery with internal resistance, b) resistive load, c) voltmeter, d) ammeter.

General #31: What is peak-envelope-power (PEP) in an emission from an rf amplifier? How can the PEP input to the final amplifying stage(s) supplying power to the antenna be determined?

Advanced #31: Why is neutralization important in amplifiers? What points in an amplifier circuit should be coupled to provide good neutralization?

Extra #31: What useful functions does a balanced modulator perform in a radio transmitter?

(I passed my General at the San Francisco FCC office in '76 and used this same study guide for my preparation.)

3301. 2006 - The year that the RSCB goes bust?

The spreading stain of the M3/CB Fools' Licence scheme has been allowed to contaminate Radio Hammery for too long.

Now that the RSCB plays no part in licensing matters and is little more than a money-hungry CBer's book publisher, let's drive them out of business - if you haven't yet resigned - then do so today _BEFORE_ your sub comes up for renewal.

Don't forget - if you are one of the traditional _REAL_ Radio Hams - the RSCB is already taking you for a sucker by using your hard-earned subscription money to give free membership to the CBers at the bottom end. If they're so eager to give out free membership - let them have nothing but non-paying members and then see how long they can survive!

Show your disgust - resign today! Starve the alien life form that is the gangrenous degeneration of the M3/CB Fools' Licence scheme of its life-blood!

One of our M3s has already decided the ARRL are a better deal.

If the RSGB has less members it has less income from members therefore less money to spend salaries and on freebies (by which I mean 'jollys' to meetings etc.). Unless, of course, these guys are cleverer than we think and can do more with less ;-)

I may have missed something but it seems logical to me.

Jeffrey,

I'm an avid CW user, but your statement above is pure fantasy. Lousy operators on the CW bands are even MORE prevalent than on phone. Listen around the .058 watering fist watering holes and you find operators so poor it would piss of Mother Theresa that they're allowed on the air.

"Self-proclaimed"? Send me an email and I'll give you the phone number of the personnel office -- they'll verify that I've been a Step C Lecturer for 20 years.

It was a worst-case starting point. Feel free to take that 670,000 and chop it down anyway you please, then divide that figure into bandwidth of usable spectrum at a particular time of day. To be accurate, the 1.7 MHz of 10m should be excluded at this time, bringing that 3.75 MHz of total spectrum bandwidth down to 2.05 MHz.

2,050,000 Hz divided by (670,000 hams divided by 2 hams per QSO) gives the worst-case scenario, about 6 Hz per QSO. Now you can take that figure and use it in any reasonable and realistic manner you please.

>The most popular US operating event is the ARRL Field Day.

And if all 670 kilohams DID have HF privileges, the worst-case scenario above might actually occur.

Why? Is it not useful spectrum?

The ARRL 10m contest was run less than 2 weeks ago. I snagged a WAS in less than 3 hours of play.

I'm confused, Colonel. I first, I thought you were asking why your father lies so much. After all, the subject of your poetic piece asks "why is my dad lie so much", or at least it would have asked it if there'd been a question mark, Mark.

Then you began referring to yourself by using a female pronoun. What gives?

you are correct i did miss that flaw in the forgery but then there wereso many that it was easy to hide, none the less you are correct My bad I apoligize to anyone that was confused

However it merely reinforces my conviction that it is almost certain that Todd N9OGL did not prodcue that forgery leaves as I said the 3341. Re: Time for the _REAL_ Radio Ham to make a stand?

I really hesitate to even appear to lend any credence to the rant below by even responding ...

However, at the same time I feel compelled to state that, when I had the pleasure of operating 4U1ITU from ITU HQ in Geneva (not too long after the US insituted the "Foundation Class"), I happily worked a LOT of M3's (perhaps 50% of about 300 contacts worked in about 2 hours on 20m) and found them to be quite well up on how to POLITELY work a DX station in a pile-up (4U1ITU invariably generates a pileup when someone activates it).

I find the "give the youngsters the cold shoulder" suggestion below to be itself infantile and it's clearly not in the best interests of the future of ham radio.
We must bring in the kids who will be the future generation of hams - otherwise when we go SK there will BE no ham radio because there won't be enough hams to justify our frequency allocations.

another forgery How ever it is quite clear that Stevie is not man enough to stand up to me face to face

Indeed Stevie does make me wish deuling were still legal, then I could and would chalenge him to meet me on the feild of honnor, and one or both of us would end up dead

soceity was a lot nicer back in the days of the code deullo and stevie and other in todays world realy do make me wish that the law allowed such old fashioned solutions

OTOH I fraankly doubt thatI would ever have occasion to meet stevei on the feild of honnor even if were still legal likely he would be dead by now, dead or VVVEEERRRYYYY good at deuling, or even more likely that he would not shoot off his mouth feet legasl cases enough to have notice him

Your own response is infantile in parts - if you disagree, you can be grown-up about it without indulging in unnecessary gratuitous emotionalisms.

You are missing the point which is that the Hobby that is about operating is CB Radio. Ham Radio OTOH is a technical pursuit.

It is not infantile to say that we are adults in a society of adults and that we do not wish to associate or be assocaited with children.

The action of "bringing in" is also misguided - those of a technical bent who are our natural successors will gravitate towards us. We do not need to, nor should we, go out and press non-technical ignoramuses and persuade them that to think that they are Radio Hams.

There's NO need to call long-distance to the University of Hawaii.

Everyone can access www.hawaii.edu, click down a few pages to Kapiolani Community College class schedules. Under that will be two classes in Elementary Algebra I taught by Jeffrey Herman.
The 2006 class schedule begins 9 January, continues to May 12, 3 credits, course number 24.

ELEMENTARY ALGEBRA I is not exactly what one would call "higher mathematics" in any mainland university.

A COMMUNITY COLLEGE is still a 2-year "junior college" even though aligned with a University; a "university" is a collection of individual colleges, has always been thus.

A LECTURER in mathematics carries with it the concept of some professor of high or many degrees "lecturing in a hall" (mini-auditorium size). Elementary Algebra I is, by title, an INTRODUCTION to mathematics, not even close to beginning The Calculus. Such a "lecturer" is really an INSTRUCTOR, a TEACHER.
Nothing wrong with being a teacher, such is well respected by most folks.

>(I've never understood why liberals resort to name-calling and sarcasm; do >they lack the ability to provide a rebuttal in a calm and polite manner?)

Well, I've never understood why someone has to "sign" his postings using TITLES which work on the emotional perception of others by omitting full details.

Being a "Chief Petty Officer" in the USCG is fine, but there IS a difference between being on active duty and in the reserves. Since the USCG had one of the smallest of all military branches' communications networks, such a title is hardly any relation to the HOBBY of amateur radio...which, when not being used for the purpose of title-rank-privelege personal pleasures, is about radio communications.

Actually, I would take your "worst-case scenario" and THROW IT INTO THE DUMPSTER WITH "GREAT FORCE." [borrowing from Hans]

First of all, "the bands" as colloquial ham-speak for HF only wouldn't be used ENTIRELY, even by the "highest" class hams. The world above 30 MHz has 99+% of all the bandwidth of amateur radio frequency allocations in the USA.

Secondly, "excluding" the 10 meter band is ridiculous. It is entirely BELOW 30 MHz, thus qualifies as being IN "the bands" (those below 30 MHz).

Third, there are SEVEN time zones among the United States. Not all radio amateurs would be ON "the bands" at the same time, certainly so during week/work days. For more practical application, one can consider FIVE time zones (excluding the far west and far east portions of Alaska where population is less dense).

Fourth, the morseaholics would be down in the "lower halves" of "the bands" playing with the morsemanship skills, pretending to be "pros" at OOK CW. Their numbers would remain relatively the same as now since there is NO great hue and cry by newcomers to do the morse thing.

Fifth, the number of no-code-test Technicians is presently on the order of approximately quarter million of all licensees (Technician class is just over 300 thousand, or twice as many as General class). Technician Plus is about 45 thousand. IF, and only IF all those denied HF operating privileges before were now given permission to operate below 30 MHz, the ACTUAL "worst-case" scenario would call for ONLY a doubling of the "bands" occupancy. There is NOTHING approaching the "6 Hz per licensee worst-case" NOW, quite observable by just listening.

Sixth, the conventional QSO - as it is done now - is simplex.
One licensee is transmitting while the other is listening.
In some cases, "netting" has several licensees on the same frequency, but only one transmitting at any one time. There is NO WAY that all licensees would be ON THE AIR at the same time.

>>The most popular US operating event is the ARRL Field Day.
>
>And if all 670 kilohams DID have HF privileges, the worst-case scenario above
>might actually occur.

NOT in the foreseeable future, i.e., the next decade IMHO.

Other than those five "60m" channels allocated for USA hams, how much have radio amateurs gotten since 1979? [1979 is 26
years ago, a quarter century]

If you are really, really worried about spectrum space in "the bands," then the time is NOW to start getting some change momentum going. WRC-07 is only two years away. The ARRL has been ineffectual in getting anything more than a few 60m channels. The long-time "pro" hams haven't helped out on that in their efforts of "citing need" to the FCC in regards to the 60m BAND petition.

Not to worry...Jimmie is on the job with his Nit Picker. :-)

[it's like a Zamboni but it works on slippery slopes...]

NPRM 05-143 dealt with only ONE regulation: Deletion or retention of Test Element 1. The Commission wanted some specific comment on that, not a gazillion new "petitions" each having a complex New Rule Set...or the "let big brother decide for youse" petition of the ARRL.

Jimmie has managed to make that ONE NPRM into some sort of cause celebre with "details" and "knowing what the FCC 'wants' and 'does'" insider information. Sigh...sort of like building a Mt. Everest using a little Bobcat.

The EXACT RF power output maximum is rather irrelevant. The market can decide the de facto power level after the FCC picks an arbitrary level to fit the greenies' anti-radiation mindset.

There isn't any logical regulatory reason for "time in grade."

All that existed before is the CONCEPT in some hams' minds that amateur radio was a 'service' and thus had to be 'professional' as a guild or craft or union. Amateur radio is basically a HOBBY and should be regulated as such.

>> 3) If the licenses are issued "for life", how would FCC know when

Were there EVER any benefits for an expired licensee? Other than the follow-on-to-new-rules-changes grandfathering?

>> Obviously a Class A could get a callsign from any block, but what would

>Each new licensee would get a new call in sequential order. Vanity calls would

Well, on the practical side (of dealing with some amateurs), this would put a crimp in the VANITY system of getting "snazzy 1x2" callsigns for 'youngsters.' :-)

The 1x2 callsign has very much been an ego-trip for many hams and deemed quite desireable with the 'guru' status of an 'old-timer.'

With only ONE 'block' instead of five at one time, there isn't any need for 'blocks' of favoritism. [new concepts are still difficult for some to grasp]

I would suggest a stricter control at the Commission on CLUB calls, perhaps with an extra alphabetic character reserved for those in the future. It's been obvious that many hams have violated the spirit of the club license in the past, fabricated fictitious "clubs" in order to gather many licenses and callsigns (for whatever their personal purpose). Such club calls have been the SAME as the sequential callsign granting and, as such, take out some of the callsigns that might be desired by others under the Vanity system. There is little point in having club calls essentially undifferentiable with individual calls as it is now.
Club activities would normally be different than individuals' activities. But, that is a minor matter of no real consequence now and that minor subject is only good for more flaming in here.

All in all, Hans, I can see your new concept is logical, sensible, simpler in regulatory structure than it has been for decades. The biggest problem will be with all those other ego-boo types who NEED the 'seniority' emotional baggage of being "better than others." :-)

There's nothing stopping non-members from writing to Ofcom explaining why they're non-members, and making representations as individuals (for example, requesting a review of the current licensing scheme).

I suspect that the ARRL is rather more representative of hams in the US than the RSGB is of hams in the UK, but there's something in what you say. By and large, citizens respond to corrupt "leaders" by working longer hours, drinking more alcohol, and blaming the French and the Arabs. OTOH, the opportunity is there for hams to cut out the middlemen and tell the government agency what they want.

OK. Also, almost any "100W" rig can be run at 50 W.

Maybe.

My point is only that you'd probably see lots of comments wanting it raised to 100-150 W.

Not a deal-killer in any event.

> > But "re-takeable" - if someone took the Class B test again,

So it's one 10-year Class B per person - just like the old Novice. That part might not survive the process because FCC would have the additional admin work of making sure someone had never held a Class B before.

But again, it's not a deal-killer in any event.
>
> > 1) What test would be required for upgrade to Class A

So everyone is on an even footing WRT upgrading to Class A.

This raises another question....

Obviously after the change took place there would be only two test elements - call them Element A and Element B.

Obviously getting a Class B would require passing Element B and getting a Class A would require passing Element A. But would Class A also require passing Element B if a person did not hold any class of license before?

Or would Element A include everything that was in Element B?

Just a detail, really, but for completeness sake...

> > 2) Would there be any experience requirement for Class B

The biggest problem I can see is that a lot of callsigns would become unavailable
unless next-of-kin wrote letters to FCC.

Which may be good - or bad.

> > 4) What would happen to the vanity callsign program under your plan?
> > Obviously a Class A could get a callsign from any block, but what would

> Each new licensee would get a new call in sequential order. Vanity calls would

>
So there could be Class B hams with 1x2s and Class A hams with 2x3s....

Some might object to that.

However, since the rules would go into effect only after notice was given,
all existing hams would have adequate time to upgrade to whatever "old" class of license they wanted before the change took place. They would also have adequate time to get a vanity call before the change.

In addition, the granting of vanity calls to Class B would be an added incentive for them to upgrade before the license ran out, because their callsign would be immediately available to others when their Class B ran out - unless they upgraded.

I'm not sure whether I like this proposal or not. But that's beside the point, really.

What's really interesting is that it meets practically all of the criteria I mentioned earlier:

- Nobody loses any privileges
- Nobody gains any privileges without testing
- No real increase in admin work (Class A is really a rebadged, lifetime Extra, and Class B is one new class).
- Some admin work will actually decrease. Only one upgrade per ham will be possible.
No renewals. Only two test elements.
- No big changes to the VEC or QPC systems

IOW, it's a complete proposal - just needs to be written up in the proper format.

Why even have a "learner's permit" at all? Looks to me like the hobby got along just fine all these years without one, so why start now? In fact, I recently picked up a 1940 edition of the ARRL Handbook, and at that time there was only one license with no learner's permit. The concept (according to the second chapter) was to memorize the code while building your first receiver, listen on your receiver to improve your code while building your first transmitter, and all the while studying for the written test. Sounds like a plan to me.

The current license structure is a direct descendant of the 1951 restructuring that gave us a system with licenses called Novice, Technician, General, Conditional, Advanced, and Extra.

> In > fact, I recently picked up a 1940 edition of the ARRL Handbook, and at

Read it some more. In 1940 there were three classes of US amateur radio license - Class A, Class B and Class C. That system was in place from 1933 to 1951,

That's what I did.

The question is how much should be required to get the intitial license.
In 1940, the minimum requirement for the Class B or C license was 13 wpm Morse Code, sending and receiving, plus a written test of about 50 questions that included multiple choice questions, drawing schematic and block diagrams, and answering some essay questions.

Since then, the requirements have changed somewhat...

the best answer is to allow for some reduced size of a question pool
but the more I look at what is suggested the more I don't see the point

Jim attirude makes it look an awfull lot like just another scheme to desendent Jim

for the past 25 years If have the dates right we have an entry license the tech that placed no limits on powerin the band it had that was restricted in band in large measure by the treaty alone

why go a for limited license now the only reason given is to allow a somewht simplier question pool

one that seem doomed to get these new Novices (or whatever we call them) subjected to diatribes we see in another thrad derected against the holder of the UK Fl license and in yet another grupop the same abuse in AU

I see no need for the USA to repeat the mistakes of the Mother Coutry or of our nephews in AU (AU being founded as derect result of the revoluation I call them our nephews)

Hans you proposals are well thought out they have some merit but one have you read tany of the thread on the English Fl license holders or the AU fellows

do you have in your bag of tricks some way of heading of such abuse? or coments on why this propoasal will not endgender the same sort of abuse?

So the proposed "learner's permit" would be equivalent to..... what?

I browsed through it some more but I didn't see any mention of the different classes of licenses. You may be right and it may be there, but I haven't found it yet. Nor have I found any mention of a "learner's permit".

Sounds fair to me. And if you're going to keep the code then 13wpm is just about right. When I learned Morse I found that it's hard to learn at a rate slower than 12wpm. Plus, that's about the minimum speed needed for any practical use (from what I hear across the spectrum).

>Since then, the requirements have changed somewhat...

I think the term is "dumbed down".

Still, I don't see any point in having a learner's permit. It's not like driving a car.....

I just finished setting up a bunch of Mark Morgan filters in Outlook Express, and the results are amazing! Rather than a constant stream of sewage and dreck, I now actually see mostly intelligent messages on rrap. Takes just little effort to start with (I had to invoke about a dozen filters to account for all his many alias's) but the results more than make up for the work.

What a pity, though, that a number of the posts in the thread served to illustrate the childish behaviour being criticised. Has the infantility of the 6-year-old mind and its M3/CB Fools' Licence contaminated Radio Hammery to that extent?

Hans emulates a computer (a higher order of modem) , refusing to use his "wetware."

He takes a tip from Dave; deliberate misunderstanding.

He might feel better after a couple of hours. Or he might not.

In either case, I hope his proposal to modernize the amateur service makes it to an NPRM.

Given the non-renewable aspect of your Class B and a difficulty level for Class A being set to approximate today's Extra; I think that presents a very large jump from B to A in one test element. Today, even with 3 element steps to Extra we see limited (i.e. about 15%) of today's hams going to Extra. Once code is gone, some of that will increase, but I suspect many people find their needs addressed at Tech or General.

Perhaps a set of 3 classes, A, B & C would make more sense wherby Class A would be as Hans proposes, Class C would be the non-renewable Class B he proposed and we call my suggested Class B a renewable version of the Class C. Class B would be 100% identical to Class C except it would be renewable and it would have a test element equivalent to todays General.

Just some more thoughts, what say you folks?

Cheers,
Bill K2UNK

Your proposal perpetuates the caste system currently in place which stratifies and divides hams into arbitrary ranks. That mentality absolutely needs to be destroyed.

It seems to me that the FCC is taking it's sweet time sending the FINAL ORDER out on K1MAN. Why is that? perhaps the FCC is playing it cautious regarding K1MAN. I still have a lot questions regarding the NAL and I'm sure the US Court of Appeal would also have some question about it.

1. pecuniary interest

One of the things that K1MAN was fined by the FCC for was Pecuniary Interest. K1MAN was transmitting the address to his website (which has commercial goods for Sale) over the radio. The fact is the ARRL also has good for sale on their website and transmits the address of their website over the radio as well. So how is it that one group is allowed to do it and the other isn't?

2. Broadcasting

Another thing the FCC had fined K1MAN for was "broadcasting" although in the NAL the FCC didn't know what the fined for that should be set at. The question raised here is was the program he was running "directed to the general public" or "directed to amateurs"? If was directed to the public then it is a broadcast and if it was the other way it could fall within the scope of definition of "information bulletin". Amateur's don't believe that information bulletin should be opinionated yet there is no "official rulling" from the FCC that states that oher wise. The easies way to determine if a program is a broadcast or not is to determine if it was directed to the general public or directed to the amateur radio service and NOT by determining if the program is opinionate or not.

I am not really for nor aganist K1MAN, however, I would question a lot of the FCC on some of this stuff.

glad to see your ointerest in ending this problem

a question that needs to be answered

why does the uresulting "Ham class" have to the exactly the equal of the extra? do you or anyone in fact think that you can keep the OT's from claiming the new "A's" are just dumbed down anyway

just what do Ham needs to know anyway, to get on the air today anyway?
thatis what the test should cover to assume a number for the classes of license is assume we need a question set ofsuch and such a size

perhaps we could serve the interest in Class with several tests each could be studied and taken in sections with CSSE's for each

perhaps in that would would some some set of tests that if you pass these 3 (out of say 5 test) or a given set on operating a class of license could exist allow the new hams to use a set up staion (the staionm ust be assemebled by the fulll ham)

but these sorts of changes would allow the ARS to all but eliate seperate classes and yet preserve what ever level is NEEDED to assure safe operation in the ARS

I've noticed that different hams tend to congregate in different parts of the spectrum, maybe because different parts of the spectrum have different characteristics requiring different skills. So why not just have one license with three "endorsements" based on spectrum use:

-- MF & HF;
-- VHF;
-- UHF & up.

......or something along those lines?????

That depends on the level required of the B license, doesn't it?

Note that some things will be eliminated from the pools for both Element A and Element B. For example, since both licenses would have access to all amateur frequencies and modes,
all the questions about various license-class subbands
and mode restrictions would disappear.

So far, anyway.

??Once code is gone??

Or once the code test is gone?

Or maybe the code test isn't the problem it is often presented to be.

More than half of the current US amateur licensees have passed all the code testing they need for Extra, yet only about 15% have gotten that license - even though the rules haven't changed in almost six years.

So a person would start out with a Class C, and could upgrade to Class B or Class A.

What that system does is essentially rebadge the current Tech/General/Extra
system with a few changes.

> Just some more thoughts, what say you folks?

Is the Extra written so tough that it's unreasonable to expect hams to pass it even after 10 years?

You should hear VK3MO on 20 metres ssb, S9+ at my location, when he's running one watt... as every _REAL_ amateur should know the answer is in the antenna not the RF output.

OK maybe lots of M3s can't resist pushing their newly bought gear up to 100W or or so., Are you telling me you always keep to the 400W at the antenna limit?

If you were on 160 metres in the 10W DC input days did you never go above that? Dozens of G2s and G3s used to run in excess of 100W output on 160m and some I know ran over 1KW. Some of those read this newsgroup... bet their faces are red :-)

Nothing ever changes...

Remember that Glenn has the money to fight the FCC and since we have the finest government money can buy...
It's all about lawyers and who can last the longest. Glen's pockets are deep.
Don't hold your breath waiting for fcc to react. They only take on people they know dont have the resources to fight back.

I disagree. Hans is a long-time mariner and his "wetware"
is more concerned with water than speculative fiction.

A "wharf" is most directly related to "wet" things, a place to dock ships. Ships float in water. Ships need good handlers with good "wetware" to maneuver them.

It's been said that "a prune is a plum with experience." :-)

Actually, I've always liked the taste of prunes, they being both sweet and tart at the same time. A personal favorite dessert is prune whip, mashed prunes in meringue.

If I need to "speed up" bowel movements I take a laxative. :-)

>In either case, I hope his proposal to modernize the amateur service

SO DO I!

One class of license, no morse code test, all bands anytime, everything optional. Free, open, for life.

A one-time "entry level" license for those who need to learn, adjust to a new environment...non-renewable, make it in ten years or give up and go to another hobby.

It's almost too revolutionary...many of the existing hams just can't handle that. "The bands" don't exist JUST for the existing hams, they are for ALL in the immediate future.

Option is no failure.

I absolutely agree with that.

With just one "class" everyone is free to try any band, any mode, as they wish. Those that want to specialize in certain bands with specific modes can continue to do so.

The Commission is, and has been, quite free with OPTIONS open to most licensees. To paraphrase Gene Kranz' famous line during Apollo 13's near disaster, "Option is no failure!"

I think the new full priv license should be at the General test level.
If you take Frank's suggestion to expire 100% of the present licenses and everyone retests, then everyone will hold an "A" license within 10 years and they can complain all they want.

It's a logical thought concept...at first. Thinking more about it will just "redistrict" the present ham population along slightly different lines from what exists now.

There's been a half-century (almost) of such subdivision and compartmenting U.S. radio amateurs up until the Restructuring of 2000. It had gotten to be too complex for what it was worth, both to the Commission and to most of the "amateur community" (as well as pushing off newcomers).

Essentially ONE "class" of license is quite sufficient.

Those that "specialize" in working specific bands with specific modes can go right on doing what they did before.
Those just won't get any especial perquisites in rank-status-title for doing so. [TS for them] Let the ham publications glorify them (in excelsior). There's no point in having the license class subdivide, stratify,
and make them "different."

Those that have a yen to experiment, innovate, try out new things in a one-class system would be free to do so, no real restrictions other than their own abilities.

Yes, there is a "danger" to having the private spectral playground of some occupied by what those specialists call "interlopers." However, NOBODY "owns" spectral property other than what the FCC stakes out in regulations. The specialists only THINK they "own" certain spectrum...it was never really "theirs" and their is no "ownership" by some kind of eminent domain of private turf.

If a person needs status that might come from holding an amateur license, they will have to do so through deeds, not a government supported merit madge system.

My ass cheese is green,
My ass cheese is black,
My ass cheese smells,
Like my husbands nutsack.

My lips smell like fish,
My lips smell like eggs,
My lips dangle down
Way beneath my legs.

My pussy runs hot,
My pussy runs cold,
My pussy looks rotten,
But it is quite old.

The more I scratch it,
The more sores I create,
The more I rub it,
The more I masturbate.

My twat oozes yellow,
My twat oozes green.
My twat has been used,
By a whole football team.

My warty puss looks good,
When it's hot, warm and wet.
My warty puss feels yummy,
When it's licked by my pet.

My understanding is that they're just asking for some more HF privileges for Techs.

Tech has been the defacto "entry level" since 2000.

No, you can't. I'd have to see the proposed change first

Of course not! No regulatory agency is ever going to say that any decision is final and/or irrevocable.

Who can say what constitutes "abuse" if the person got

What FCC did was to reduce both the number of tests and the total number of questions for each class of license.

Only true if those hams continue to renew and never ever upgrade.

The big admin issue with new license classes is that the database has to be re-done.

They're observations based on FCC's behavior for more than 20 years. Can you cite examples where FCC did not act according to them?

You don't have to bet me, Bill, we'll do dinner one of these days eventually. I'm just sorry I missed the chance to meet Carl in person when he was down here some months back.

That's not unreasonable - particularly considering that there are only about 29,000 Novices left and the number keeps dropping every month.

3485. Another License Idea

Reposted and updated slightly:

1) Three classes of license: Basic, Intermediate, Full (change the names if you don't like them - Third, Second, First, Novice, General, Extra, whatever)

2) HF/MF bands split into subbands by mode and split again by license class. Some bands (30 meters) may be split by mode only. Bottom of each band is CW only, middle is CW/digital, top is CW/phone/image. Percentage division about 20%/30%/50% (varies with band). "Digital" includes digital voice modes if bandwidth under 1 kHz.

3) "Basic" license test is simple 20-25 question exam on regs, procedures, and safety. Very little technical and RF exposure stuff. Main objective is to keep Basics out of trouble. Basics get 100-50 watts on HF/MF and 25 watts or so on VHF/UHF (power level is below the point where RF exposure evaluation required). Modes are CW, analog voice, PSK31, RTTY and many of the other common data modes like packet. Basics cannot be VEs, control ops for repeaters, or club trustees. Basics get most VHF/UHF and about half of HF/MF spectrum, including parts of all subbands-by-mode. Basic is meant as the entry level. Easy to get, lots of privs, yet there's still a reason to upgrade.

4) "Intermediate" license test is more complex 50-60 question exam on regs, procedures, safety and technical stuff. Intermediates get 300-400 watts on all bands, all modes. Intermediates can be VEs after qualification (see below), control ops for repeaters, and club trustees. Intermediates get all VHF/UHF and about three quarters (or more) of HF/MF spectrum.

5) "Full" license test is quite complex 100-120 question exam on regs, procedures, safety and technical stuff. Mostly technical, with some regs to cover expanded privs. Fulls get all privileges, modes, bands, etc. except that Fulls can be VEs only after qualification (see below).

6) All licenses are 10 year and fully renewable/modifiable. No age requirements or limits.

7) Basics have six-character calls, Intermediates have five- or six-character calls, and Fulls have four-, five-, or six-character calls. Nobody has to give up an existing callsign.

8) Separate 30-35 question test for VE qualification, open to Intermediates and Fulls, which allows them to be VEs. Existing

VEs are grandfathered.

9) Existing Novices, Techs and Tech Pluses become Basics, existing Generals and Advanceds become Intermediates, and existing Extras become Fulls. Existing hams can continue to use their current privileges when they exceed privileges granted by the new system as long as they retain license documents showing their old license class. Existing Tech Pluses who can show proof of license before Mar 21, 1987 get Intermediates.

10) Change to new system is at least six months to one year after announcement to allow time for question pool reorganization and so existing hams can upgrade under present rules if they want.

End result is a system that is easy to get into (Basic is envisioned as a 21st century version of the Novice) and has reasonable but meaningful steps to reach full privileges.
Testing matches the privs granted. Power levels are set about one S-unit apart. Nobody loses any privileges. There are only three license classes and four written tests, so FCC doesn't have more work.

Example of new privileges:

80/75 meters
3500-3575 CW only
3575-3750 CW/data
3750-4000 CW/analog phone/image

Basic: 3525-3625 and 3900-4000
Intermediate: 3525-3750 and 3850-4000
Full: entire band

A Vietnamese proverb I include in my syllabus each semester says, "If you study you'll become what you desire; if you do not study you'll never become anything." That exactly describes what separates any particular segment of a population from another, including hams. There is no "caste system" in amateur radio, for a caste is defined being born into a particular social class and never being able to move from that class.

What separates an Extra from an Tech is not a "caste system" but rather who had the motivation to study versus who didn't.

You sound like a socialist, Hans -- a believer in one and only one class in a society.

No 73 for socialists,

QP contains 10,000 questions. You take a test, 1 question at a time. Questions selected at random. You keep going til you miss one. No retakes, no upgrades. Each right question earns 10Hz of spectrum, your choice of frequency, but it must be made at the exam session. That is your lifetime allotment.

One of them who says he's a 'remote viewer' claims that several of his protege's have picked several winning lottery no's. Of course when they are asked to come forward to substantiate the claims, the usual excuses
of 'confidentiality' and other such is usually stated.

All you have to do is tell us who they were, what they did and when they did it.

Maybe I will, Len. Or maybe someone else will.

Point is, you haven't provided any evidence to back up your claims.

So why should we believe you instead of ARRL?

What makes your "history" any more credible than theirs?

History of amateur radio.
>

Actually, that happened in 1912, although enforcement wasn't perfect.

> BANISHMENT is banishment.

It was regulation. There was need to have more order among the various users of radio. The old free-for-all systems just didn't work.

> U.S. radio amateurs have NEVER been granted any band

So what?

Amateurs were "banished" to the "short-waves" because those short waves were thought (in 1912) to be useless for long distance communication. The professionals and regulators were all wrong about that, however.

too. Much smaller than ARRL.

Less than one out of a hundred licensed U.S. radio amateurs are members of NCI. This despite the fact that NCI membership is free, never expires, and can be had for a few mouse clicks or a letter.

No, they do not. They don't rule - they represent.

Seems to bother you no end that there is an organization
"devoted entirely to amateur radio".

It's clear from your many anti-ARRL tirades, Len, that you'd really like it if there were no national amateur radio organization.

> >FCC makes the regulations.
>
> Ah, but, on 10 December, you wrote "FCC doesn't license

Well, Len, that was a typo I made. I've corrected it already.

I wrote "FCC" when I meant to write "FAA". My bad - just a mistake.

Know why it sticks out so much? Because it's so unusual!

Now, about typos....

Was it a typo when you told K8MN to 'shut the hell up, you little USMC feldwebel' ?

Was it a typo when you wrote, almost 6 years ago, that you were going for Extra right out of the box?

Was it a typo when you lectured a US Coast Guard radio operator on his military service as a radio operator in the classic "sphincters post"?

Was it a typo when you wrote that all amateurs with expired-but-in-the-grace-period licenses could legally operate their amateur radio stations?

Was it a typo when you accused the ARRL and some VEs of 'very mild fraud' because of the licensing of some young children? (You never presented any evidence of fraud other than the ages of the children)

Was it a typo when you twice accused a developer/contractor in your area of 'payola' to the zoning commission - and the commission accepting it?

Were all those things typos, Len? I didn't see any corrections to them.

I corrected my FAA typo.

FCC Docket 9295

Just did.

But why should I? You don't.

You've called the ARRL a "one party system", "oligarchy" and claimed all sorts of things about FCC "chuckling" over comments.

Yet the fact is that two relatively-small groups had a big effect on the 1951 restructuring. Those groups are long gone, having disappeared soon after they got their way...

The fact is that everyone in the military pledges their willingness to face combat and mortal danger if and when called upon. No argument about that.

But that's also true of many nonmilitary people as well. Law enforcement officers...firefighters and rescue workers....emergency medical team members,
to name just a few, face the potential of mortal danger too.

You think you are, anyway.

But have you ever demonstrated any of that to amateur radio?

You claim to have written for "ham radio" magazine for some years, but none of your articles in that magazine are construction project articles. Nor are there any depictions of actual radios you built yourself - there or anyplace else. No websites, no articles, no pictures.

Also, the ability to design a radio and the qualifications to operate it are not one and the same.

> I am not AUTHORIZED to USE it on frequencies which are > regulated by an AUTHORIZING AGENCY.

Nor are you qualified to use it on the amateur bands.

> In this case, the agency is the FCC.

FCC's regulations say a license is required to operate an amateur radio station. You have not qualified for the required license, therefore, in the view of the TCC, you are Not Qualified.

can say:

"I have LEGALLY OPERATED on non-amateur bands both above and below the amateur "220" band since 1952."

They've been telling you what to do as well, Len. In fact they've been telling you what you cannot do for more than 70 years: You cannot legally operate an amateur radio station....

FCC says you're Not Qualified.

IOW, you have no facts to back up your claims.
>
> City government activity involving zoning ordinances have > NOTHING to do with radio,

Actually, it does, since radio requires antennas.

There's a valid analogy between real estate and radio spectrum, too:

Zoning ordinances are government regulation of land use.

FCC rules are government regulation of (civilian) radio use.

Both are intended to maximize the benefit of all concerned -
"the public", as it were.

Now you may say that you "own" your property, and that no
radio amateur "owns" any radio spectrum.

But if you think you "own" your house and land, try not paying your real estate taxes and see how long you "own" it. Or try resisting eminent domain...

The major point is that you resisted change when it applied to your local zoning - as if the regulation of other people's property was never to change without your approval. Yet you want to impose your changes on others when it comes to radio regulations.

> >Were you top of the form in Morse Code? I think not.

With a staff numbering in the hundreds or even thousands, all working full-time to transfer those messages. Also investment in equipment and facilities totalling millions of dollars.

With the authority to override any civilian government objections, too.

> > You
> >always seem to spin away from "communications circuits"

Sure you are. The US Navy was using Morse Code for "communications circuits" with its ships long after you left the Army.

Mor important, you constantly harp on 1950s military communications as if they had some overwhelming importance or significance to amateur radio in 2005.

I think you'd like to believe that - true or not. No way can you give Morse
Code any credit.

Your attempts to get the rules changed, Len. You're not involved in amateur radio, but you want the rules changed for reasons you refuse to state.

At least the developer who got your local zoning changed was involved, up-front and honest.

He was involved because he bought the 15 acre tract.

He was up-front and honest because he showed what he wanted to build there, and his motive for doing so (to make a profit).

> I am simply showing the TRUTH of the reality of communications

Not when it comes to amateur radio.

> The FCC gives you the OPTION of using any allocated mode, any

That's right - because I'm qualified to operate an amateur radio station,

You're not qualified to operate an amateur radio station, Len.

> One of those OPTIONAL modes is morse code on-off > keying.

All authorized modes are OPTIONAL in amateur radio, Len.
No radio amateur has to use any specific mode.

Yet the testing for an amateur radio license requires some knowledge of a wide variety of subjects - almost all of which are optional.

If someone wants to legally operate an amateur radio station on, say, 7020 kHz using Morse Code and vacuum-tube equipment, that person will have to pass tests that having nothing to do with 40 meters, Morse Code or vacuum tubes.

> NO ONE is "taking that away from you" when the morse > code test is removed from amateur licensing regulations.

Just as NO ONE took anything away from you that was rightfully yours when the zoning was changed.

Of course - because I'm qualified. You're not.

You are not part of the FCC nor law enforcement, Len.

The fact is that none of the unlicensed FCC staffers or commissioners is qualified to operate an amateur radio station. Just like the President (aka Commander in Chief) is not qualified to operate most military equipment (aircraft, ships, radios, etc.) but nevertheless is in command.

You're not in command, Len.

You left out my concept. That is two licenses. These would be General and Extra (no "learner's permit" type of license). The difficulty levels would be comparable to today's General and Extra. Privileges would be the same as today's General and Extra. For General, that would mean blending the current Tech & General material to create a single test. My opinion is that test would need to be about 50 questions. The Extra could remain unchanged.

My mail carrier delivered the January, 2006 issue of QST on December 24. It carries an interesting article "Secret Agent Hams: Remembering Camp X" by Gil McElroy VE3PKD. McElroy's piece mentions us that the camp was also the location of a high-powered radio station known as "Hydra" and the article states "Not surprisingly, hams had a central role in it all".

McElroy states that "Hydra was operated by former hams, recruited by Camp X administrators who went looking ofr them specifically, using prewar government listings to locate the best quality Amateur Radio operators. He goes on to name some of them and goes on to quote Lynn-Philip Hodgson, author of the book "Inside Camp X":

"...an amateur radio operator was an ideal candidate for handling clandestine radio activity of any description, be it interception or the actual transmitting of traffic. the radio amateur liked and understood his hobby, he was good at solving technical problems and keeping equipment running without seeking outside assistance. He was already capable of sending and receiving Morse Code efficiently, and needed only to be trained in the specialities of handling clandestine radio messages".

A number of photos are included in the article. The caption of one of them should prove galling to the factually challenged Leonard Anderson. It reads, "Bill Hardcastle VE3RY (right) reads the May 1942 issue of QST at Camp X while Bob Rowan consults 'The Radio Amateur's Handbook'."

Today's mail brought the January, 2006 copy of CQ. An article on the various voice modes mentions Fessenden's 1906 amplitude modulation feat. The letters section of the same issue features one sent by Steve Robeson K4YZ.

Happy New Year, Mr. Anderson.

Perhaps it is not "Unintended". It may be precisely what the FCC wanted to do. It is a way of increasing the motivation to upgrade. In reading the NPRM, there is a distinct feeling, IMHO, that the FCC does NOT want people to stay at the introductory level.

Which raises the next question --- who CARES what the >FCC< wants. They should

I'll remember that for the next time I want to impress a Vienamese bimbo.

Meanwhile here's a proverb from Bokonon which I include in my lectures:

"Beware of the man who works hard to learn something,
learns it, and finds himself no wiser than before.
He is full of murderous resentment of people who are ignorant without having come by their ignorance
the hard way."

Quite the opposite, Jeffrey, I'm a staunch Libertarian, and I believe that the only legitimate interest that government has in Amateur Radio licensing is to determine if the applicant is qualified or not qualified, not to social-engineer the Amateur Service into an arbitrary layer cake of good/better/best operators.

I only saw two cases of waivers being used. One was my ex-husband and I personally knew how severe his problem was. Naturally I was not a VE at those sessions. The other case was at a test session where I was taking my Extra exam. Someone did come in and present his waiver.

The syllabus for the Extra class license most certainly did change. The material that had formerly been on the Advanced license was rolled into the Extra exam. However, due to timing issues there was a very short window of time where anyone upgrading was taking the Extra exam that did not include that material as the question pool took a while to revise.

The syllabus for the Technician also changed although not as dramatically and again timing issues came into play so that there was a window where the exams had not yet been updated. But it was revised to cover the material that had been on the old Novice exam as well as including the Technician material.

The only syllabus that was unaffected was that of the General license.

One license with "endorsement" is the same as having different licenses.
It's just a change in terminology.

Although the licensing structure was changed in 2000, the Tech license has been the defacto entry license for several years before that. I earned my original license in 1992. All the new licensees that I personally knew started at either Tech or Tech with code.

I absolutely agree with that.+

(if one agrees with this Oldster, all is good, otherwise you will spend a week as a cashier in the Wal-Mart checkout lane)

With just one "class" everyone is free to try any band, any mode, as they wish. Those that want to specialize in certain bands with specific modes can continue to do so.

(I think I'll try 11 meters, thank you)

The Commission is, and has been, quite free with OPTIONS open to most licensees. To paraphrase Gene Kranz' famous line during Apollo 13's near disaster, "Option is no failure!"

And may I say, "Age is no excuse."

So, Lennie, <Star Spangled Banner music> sully forth and do your best to address the varicose veins that make your legs appear as an Allied map of the Rhine River crossing of WW II. Those old legs must have jumped from an uncountable number of perfectly good aircraft...or were pushed from the backs of moving Deuce-and-a-Halfs to join the rest of the roadside detritus.

The latter is most likely how you served.

Make that "feats", Dave, 'cause RF did a number of them.

The one most remembered is his Christmas Eve 1906 "broadcast" of voice and music, which was received by both land stations and ships at sea.

That broadcast was repeated on New Year's Eve.100 years ago tonight!

But RF also had 2 way transatlantic voice communication working even earlier.

It's to serve as an upgrade incentive. Not everyone aspires to run high power.

> Is it
> more difficult to understand how to operate on 3524 than on 3526?

Of course not.

Neither is it more difficult to understand how to operate a 100 watt transmitter than a 50 watt transmitter. But under your system, a Class B licensee could not legally operate a 100 watt transmitter.

RF exposure, you say? The RF exposure hazard (in the high gain direction)
from a 50 watt UHF transmitter with a high gain antenna is far more than that from a 100 watt HF transmitter with a low-gain antenna at the same distance.

Yet under your system, a Class B licensee could legally operate a 50
watt
UHF transmitter and high-gain antenna, but not not legally operate a 100 watt transmitter with low gain antenna.

Oh, another upgrade for upgrade's sake. And a completely arbitrary and

It is on 10 meters. The law requires an EA at 100 watts, but not at 50.

An article in QST states "Not surprisingly, hams had a central role in it all."

Why am I not suprised?

"Prewar government listings?" I thought Bush was the only President guilty of such profiling?

"Best quality Amateur Radio operators?" The A-1 Operators was a government list?

Yikes! That must have been in an ERA when the Democrats trusted
"thier" government. Oh, wait, wasn't that when the Dems had full control of the government?

Why wouldn't an amateur be reading an amateur publication? Do you thnk QST would have included the photo where he's reading "Life?"

Would an amateur centered publication be posting the names of the professional engineers associated with the project? Maybe that wouldn't be self-serving?

Steve will do anything to get hisself into the spotlight, even forge postings on RRAP. You would have thought he would have left all that attention seeking behind when he left the orphanage, but its just a part of who he is, now.

Exactly. In the end, it was the doctor's, if anyone, that would have to be assessed as signing off on a waiver that shouldn't have been issued.

Neither of which makes testing easier as long as the total syllabus of questions remains the same.
If a student is given a list of 100 spelling words to learn, it is neither easier or harder for the student to pass if the spelling test has 20 words or 10 words.
In the end, the student still has to learn all the words on the list.

Do you see any mass effort to upgrade by currently licensed Novice or Advanced license holders? In fact, there seems to be more than a handful of Advanced that say they'll never upgrade so they can be ID'd
as having passed 13wpm morse.

In today's environment that shouldn't be a big deal at all.
The entire database could probably be imported into an Excel file and given to some college computer science majors and modified in a day or so. This stuff just isn't rocket science anymore.

It was a screwy idea anyway. Old Tech w/o HF, Old Tech with HF, Tech Plus, New Tech w/o HF, New Tech (no Plus) with HF.

But, but, but if the Government couldn't determine who the very best operators were, then QST would have no "antique radio" article to write about in the January issue of QST.

I've only had 2 qso's on topband in my life and never broken the terms of my licence. At least the G2's and G3's /earned/ the right to be on the bands, they had nothing given to them.

No it doesn't, there'll always be some apologist for mediocrity and the dumbing down of amateur radio to the level of six year olds and retards with the mental age of 6.

That was my point. It's not really significantly different than the current system. It's just renaming and a slight reshuffling.

VHF+UHF&up endorsement = current no-code Tech license
VHF+UHF&up+HF&MF = current Extra license (I'm assuming that you mean full band privileges so that would eliminate the Generals).

There's no sense in splitting VHF/UHF into separate endorsements as most of the people that I know in this area operate both 2m (i.e. VHF) and 440mHz (i.e. UHF).

Calling them "endorsements" has no benefits over calling them different licenses.

The FCC database does indicate if someone used a medical waiver.
You have to know the codes but they're pretty easy to figure out.

Ancient history now anyway, since medical waivers haven't existed for almost six years now.

No, the student simply has to learn enough words to get a passing grade.

And the number of tests was reduced as well, so the chances of squeaking by improved!

Nope. Novice total is down to about half what it was before restructuring,
Advanced is down to about three-quarters. Part of that is clearly attrition, and some is due to upgrading.

> In fact,
> there seems to be more than a handful of Advanced

Which simply proves their ignorance!

The simple possession of an Advanced is not proof of 13 wpm code testing, because:

- For a decade or so, an Advanced could be had with 5 wpm code and a medical waiver

- For a limited time after the 2000 restructuring, an Advanced could be had by getting a 5 wpm General and a CSCE for the Advanced written.

I know, but FCC sure seems to make a big deal about it.

For example, why in the world did FCC decide to renew Tech Pluses as Techs?

Why doesn't FCC renew licenses when a modification (address/name change, upgrade, etc.) is done? (see below for possible reason).

> The entire database could probably be imported into an > Excel file and given to some college computer science > majors and modified in a day or so. This stuff just isn't rocket > science anymore.

The problem is that since the database is official Government information, it can't just be handed out that way. And with over 700,000 entries in the amateur radio database alone, (including grace period licenses), checking for mistakes

could be a major headache.

The main point in trying to understand the FCC mindset is to help craft proposals that have a better-than-snowball's-chance of actually being implemented.

There was a time when FCC would renew a license with a modification. This helped me out back in the 1970s when I moved a few times (school, job, etc.). Each move got me a new 5 year term on the license.

The FCC went to 10 year license terms back in 1983-84 to reduce paperwork.

But then FCC changed the rules so that renewal can only be done if the license is within 90 days of expiring, or if a vanity call is issued.

The vanity call thing is to avoid pro-rating the fee, IIRC.

But why not renew a ham's license whenever the amateur moves? Doing so would reduce the number of interactions each ham would have with FCC unless they didn't change anything for 10 years.

One possible reason is enforcement. An enforcement tool that FCC has used recently is to not routinely renew the license of an amateur who is at odds with the Commission. (K1MAN?)
The license renewal is "under review" for as long as FCC deems suitable. Obviously it helps not to be handing out renewals all the time for that tool to be effective.

Another reason may be to keep the database more accurate.

No.

If you look at K0HB's license-structure idea, the main (in fact the only difference in operating privileges between his Class A and Class B licenses is the power allowed.

Class A gets full 1500 W

Class B gets 50 W

Hans' idea is that by limiting Class B to 50 W, the RF exposure questions can be eliminated, or at least greatly reduced. But the fact is that 50 W can still be an RF exposure hazard on some frequencies (UHF in particular) if a high gain antenna is used.

Deciding that the power level of 50 W is acceptable for Class B, but 100 W is not, is just a matter of judgement. It's the same kind of judgement as saying that 3500-3525 kHz is not allowed for all license classes.

Nominations Sought For 2006 Dayton Hamvention® Awards

The Dayton Hamvention ® now is accepting nominations for its 2006 awards for Radio Amateur of the Year, Special Achievement, and Technical Excellence. The deadline for nominations is February 20, 2006.

All amateur radio operators are eligible. The winners will be recognized at the 2006 Hamvention ®, which runs May 19-21.

· The Radio Amateur of the Year Award goes to an individual who has made a long-term, outstanding commitment to the advancement of Amateur Radio.

· The Technical Excellence Award is for the person who has made an outstanding technical advancement in the field of Amateur Radio.

· The Special Achievement Award honors someone who has made an outstanding contribution to the advancement of Amateur Radio, usually someone who has spearheaded a significant project.

The Hamvention® Awards Committee makes the decision on all awards based in part upon the information it receives--and not on the number of nominations submitted.

Documentation that informs the Awards Committee of a candidate's accomplishments may include magazine articles, newsletters, newspaper clippings, and even videos. (Note: These materials become the property of Hamvention and will not be returned.)

Nominations are due by February 20, 2006. Additional details on these awards and a nomination form are available on the Dayton Hamvention® Web site <http://www.hamvention.org/nominate.htm>. Nominations also are accepted via US mail to Dayton Hamvention® Awards, PO Box 964, Dayton, OH 45401.

The Dayton Hamvention® is the world's largest gathering of amateur radio operators. It is expected to bring more than 25,000 of the worlds radio amateurs to the Dayton area next May.

not quite allow me to correct you they takeon those they THINK don't have the reasourses or that they CAN bluff in folding which is how the latest K1MAN flap started at least according to rumor

tthe rumor like this the FCC had decided to let sleeping dog lie in the but someone did not get the word (and issued the NAL) based on his assement of K1MAN resources and willingness to fight

Steve has a lawyer?

That'll be news to Mark.

All Mark wants is an apology and Steve's promise not to bring up a person's sexuality on RRAP.

All Steve has to do is come through.

Instead he's going to drag his name through the mudd on RRAP and in the Michigan courts.

proof is unneeded by steve and his fellow travelers indeed proving anyting defeat their own point that is to spread hate and try to tar their foes with there own missdeeds

it is slander with catch that the victum can't proove something very important , monitary damages, meaning legal action falls apart, and Law

I care what the FCC wants. Whether I think that they are on the right track or not is not the issue.

We the people engage professionals to do a job, in this case, be the "Highway Patrol of the Airwaves". We frustrate that by second-guessing them at every turn, telling them that we know better, and thereby not letting them do the job that we hired them for.

If the bottom line is that the folks we engage do not do a professional job, throw then out and get folks who will. This presumes that you have better professional qualifications than they do.

As an employer you know that scenario very well.

>They should serve the wants of the people, not the other way around.

No, they should provide for the NEEDS of the people. Otherwise, it's like letting the kids live on candy bars and soda rather than health-giving food.

Happy New Year to y'all.

This has got to be the worst e-bay'er of all time bar none.

Far worse than even a certain 'seller of pre-owned

http://feedback.ebay.com/ws/eBayISAPI.dll?ViewFeedback&userid=alisher71&ite

E-Bay should also be held accountable for facilitating this scammer.
Is all that e-Bay interested in is keeping their Seller's happy and the Fee Revenus rolling in un-hindered ?? Seems so !

Of course. You are one of the most disagreeing amateurs on RRAP.

Nope. Wrong. False. The questions are random within each group.
Study of only 70% of eack does not guarantee a passing single exam, let alone fewer exams.

Some may be staying in that "rank" because of the reasons given by your genious freind, Bruce/WA8ULX. But then he went and upgraded, busting his own rant.

That would be an -unexpired- CSCE for Advanced. My CSCE for G/A/E expired a long time before that.

One of my VE's walked out when, after having passed both exams, I said that I had no intention of taking a code exam. He didn't want his name on any of my docs.

I'm thinking about 3 million for a "served in other ways" contractor to take on the task of upgrading a 700K record database.

To hell with that. Why not tell the FCC what WE want rather than what we think they might want to hear?

How much time have you spent in government or academia?

That's like the American Red Cross saying "I need 3 operators per shift, 3 shifts per day, around the clock until further notice," and Steve Robeson/K4YZ saying, "You're gonna get no operator on the 1st shift, two on the second shift, and one on the third shift because I know what you need better than you do. Besides, leaving an operations post unmanned is what we did in the Marines."

Obviously this guy found out a way to make a quick buck. First list a couple hundred items in a short period of time that will bring big bucks, the guy had good feedback so everyone pays, then take the money and run.

I don't think eBay has a way to stop this from happening. It happened to me a couple of years ago with an auto parts dealer that was selling on eBay. He had a few thousand good feedback's so why would I not send him the money? within three weeks every feedback was neg. I didn't get the item or my money back.

People go bankrupt everyday.

Yes, this seller is slightly worse than RadioMart(RM). I rarely buy items on ebay that are new or hot (as in popular) items. The ebay prices are generally not any better than just buying online, in which case you have a credit card to protect your purchase.

Ebay is good for "classic" gear, test equipment, stuff like that. Even then, you can still get burnt, but at least something shows up.

My income is totally independent of what the FCC wants. The agency could be abolished tomorrow and my income will not change one bit (unless "tomorrow" is the day that the COL increase on my pension annuity and Social Security kicks in, as it will tomorrow). The FCC has no connection with that, nor with the private investments that also provide for my retirement income.

If you think that retiring on 50% of a salary that is 50% (or more) less than what one could get in the private sector is "fat", I have a (Weeatstone) bridge that I can sell you "real cheaply".

Do not forget that a Federal retirement annuity (prension) is not a "gift" from the taxpayers. It is an annuity that is bought by the employee with after-tax money and such purchase is not optional.

Brian, the best Jimmie can come up with is just warmed-over EXISTING regulations with a slightly different bit of cosmetic changing.

Note: There are only THREE license classes granted NOW.

Farf. There's BANDPLANS now, splitting "the bands" by mode
AND class.

More Farf. Cosmetic changes to classes that exist NOW.

>> 6) All licenses are 10 year and fully renewable/modifiable. No

NO change at all. Status quo-ism.

>> 7) Basics have six-character calls, Intermediates have five- or >> six-character calls, and Fulls have four-, five-, or >> six-character calls. Nobody has to give up an existing callsign.

Be absolutely SURE that the lowest class is readily identifiable
as the LOWEST one. Tsk, can't have those nasty "beginners"

messing up the playground!

>> 8) Separate 30-35 question test for VE qualification, open to >> Intermediates and Fulls, which allows them to be VEs. Existing >> VEs are grandfathered.

Oh my, something NEW! "Unbeliegable," said Arte Johnson.

So, "what was WRONG with the present system" that it needs this spay-shull "test" to proctor a license exam...with the answers readily available to them and NO need to make any decisions such as on schematics or essay questions?

Geez, privatization in testing has been going on a LONG time without any specific "testing of the VEs."

>> End result is a system that is easy to get into (Basic is >> envisioned as a 21st century version of the Novice) and has >> reasonable but meaningful steps to reach full privileges.

The Novice class was a numbers failure. That's apparent to most folks other than Jimmie.

With a ONE-class license plus the ONCE-only "entry" license
it is EASIER than the above regurgitated existing system.

WHY is there a "privilege" system at all NOW? To keep "the bands" free of "interlopers" that mess up the olde-tymers' operations with "extraneous signals?"

>> Testing matches the privs granted.

It should, there is NO real change from the existing system.

>> Power levels are set about >> one S-unit apart. Nobody loses any privileges. There are only >> three license classes and four written tests, so FCC doesn't

I N C O R R E C T !

The FCC has to ADDITIOMALLY TEST Volunteer Examiners. More work for them. But, as in Latin ("who watches the watchers?") who will test the VE applicants? Other VEs? Not unless they have ALREADY been tested...which leads to an impossible condition.

What's with this "power level" per "class" thing, anyway?

If that were meaningful, there would be FCC field teams out there measuring field strengths and knocking on doors, etc.
Obviously there aren't and any existing "RF power output"
maximums in amateur radio operate on the honor system.
Ain't no extensive "RF power output" checking being done.

HAR! :-)

Well, since Jimmie didn't come up with anything "new" other than doing a Max Factor Thing with the existing regulations (plus the NEW test for VEs), I'll just remind everyone of what is in the regulations NOW...and has been since at least 1995:
The FCC states that each written test element Question Pool must contain a MINIMUM of 10 times the number of required questions.

There is NO maximum on the Question Pool. [I don't think there ever was one] It's all up to the VE QPC on how many it wants to generate and distribute. Make it 20 times, 30 times, 50, even a 100 times the minimum in the QP...that will knock down all those charges of "memorization."

Yawn.

Nappy Hoo Year!

Screw it..... one license, no "classes", no "learner's permit". Anyone who is sincerely interested in the hobby will learn the crap and get their license, code or no code, including me. If that means fewer hams then so be it -- only the ARRL cares about increasing the number of hams. But even then, the ARRL might be suprised since the time spent on studying the different classes and priveleges will be better spent learning theory, communications and safety. Quality, not quantity.

And that's my final answer.

Odd, but the General could proctor Technician exams, and the Advanced could proctor General exams. The Extra Exam had loads of VE questions, the General and Advanced had none.

As far as I'm concerned, since the VEC's are already disregarding FCC rules, we can dispense with the Extra Exam altogether and let the VEC's qualify "thier" examiners without any spay-shull FCC exam.

It's easier for the FCC to maintain, and it's all that is necessary.

Great! Now you've finally given him some ammunition...
